Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much will be spent or has been spent in each year from 1990-91 to 1995-96 on (a) stage 1 ESAs, (b) stage 2 ESAs, (c) stage 3 ESAs and (d) stage 4 ESAs, identifying how much of the total is allocated for the public access payments; what is the amount to be spent on (i) nitrate-sensitive areas, (ii) the moorland scheme, (iii) the habitat improvement scheme, (iv) set-aside management, identifying how much of the total will be for public access payments, and (v) organic farming in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Expenditure on payments to farmers in the two ESA areas designated in 1988 and 1989 was £200,000 in 1990-91, £393,000 in 1991-92 and £466,000 in 1992-93 and planned expenditure is £750,000 in 1993-94. Planned expenditure for revised and new ESAs designated in 1993 is £2 million in 1994-95 and £4·4 million in 1995-96. None of this funding is specifically allocated for public access.

While there are no plans at present to introduce a nitrate-sensitive areas scheme in Northern Ireland, public consultation documents have been issued under the agri-environment regulation for a moorland scheme, a habitat improvement scheme and an organic scheme. Planned expenditure on payments to farmers under these proposed new measures in Northern Ireland is £252,000 in 1994-95 and £1·08 million in 1995-96. The precise allocation between the schemes will be decided in the light of the results of public consultation. As is the case for ESAs, no payments are specifically allocated for public access.

Taxi Drivers (Terrorist Incidents)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all reported incidents since 1969, in date order, in which taxi or minicab drivers in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain were the victims of (i) loyalist and (ii) republican terrorists.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 5 May 1993]: The information is not available in respect of Nothern Ireland and is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary in respect of Great Britain.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Independent Television Companies

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to meet the Independent Television Commission to discuss the implications of the merger of Yorkshire Television and Tyne-Tees Television for the work of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I do not consider a meeting with the chairman of the Independent Television Commission to be necessary. The monitoring of licence conditions is the responsibility of the ITC and not the Government, and I understand that the ITC is discussing with Yorkshire Tyne-Tees Holdings how it proposes to fulfil its licence obligations.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many scheduled ancient monuments are currently at risk as a result of ploughing; and how many have been damaged since the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979.

Mr. Brooke: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 1 March, Official Report, column 14. It is not known how many scheduled monuments are at risk as a result of ploughing or how many may have been damaged through ploughing since 1979. English Heritage will shortly be embarking on a study to identify those monuments most at risk.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to propose to landowners practical and financial arrangements to prevent the destruction of scheduled ancient monuments through ploughing.

Mr. Brooke: English Heritage already offers advice to landowners and, under the provisions of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979, often negotiates management agreements, which can involve financial payment, for the protection of sites. I will consider the case for further action in the light of the study which English Heritage is about to undertake of monuments at risk from ploughing.

Archaeological Sites

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what effect the introduction of policy planning guideline 16—PPG 16—has had on the protection and investigation of archaeological sites blighted by redevelopment proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced on 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 124, the outcome of a review of the effectiveness of PPG 16 one year after it was published. A copy of the report of the review was placed in the Library. It indicated that the advice given in PPG 16 has been adopted by every local planning authority in England, and that the archaeological significance of planning applications is now much more fully considered. I am satisfied that the guidance is proving valuable to all parties who may become involved with archaeology and the planning process.

Lighting Costs

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the current annual cost of lighting the exterior of (a) Buckingham palace, (b) St James's palace, (c) Clarence house and (d) other Government buildings in Whithall and Parliament square.

Mr. Key: The royal palaces and residences referred to are not floodlit. The lighting of the exterior of Government buildings in Whitehall and Parliament street is the responsibility of the individual Departments, but I understand that the cost is currently around £40,000 per year. The House authorities are responsible for the floodlighting of the Palace of Westminster and I understand that the cost is around £7,000 per year.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Dr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out the role the Agricultural and Food Research Council has with respect to horticulture; and what resources are deployed including manpower and finance by the council with respect to horticulture.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Agricultural and Food Research Council's programme includes basic and strategic research which underpins horticulture. The council's funding for horticultural research at Horticulture Research International and in universities is expected to be £4·5 million in 1993-94. A total of 561 staff at Horticulture Research International are currently AFRC employees. In addition, AFRC supports 17 research assistants on three-year horticulture-related projects in universities.

Research and Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the proposals for the Commission's fourth framework research and development programme launched by Research Commissioner Ruberti on 22 April.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 4 May, at column 26.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is a requirement for each European Community-supported infrastructure project in the United Kingdom and in each other member state to have had an environmental assessment and an economic assessment; and what arrangements are made for the assessments to be available to members of the public.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no special provisions for the environmental impact assessment of European structural funds projects, but all such projects must conform with national and Community environmental legislation.

Where a proposed development is of a type listed in directive 85/337/EEC and is likely to have significant environmental effects, environmental assessment will be required under the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988. For such projects the applicant must prepare and submit an environmental statement, setting out the likely effects of the project on the environment, with the application for planning permission. Notice must be publicised in a local newspaper and copies of the statement made available for inspection and placed on the planning register.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell), on 16 April, Official Report, column 763, what is the breakdown by county of the amount of ECGD guarantees in default.

Mr. Needham: The total of £8,118·5 million in respect of gross paid claims, plus interest, under ECGD guarantees which have not been recovered or have been written off as at 31 March 1992 is made up of amounts on 130 different countries.

The largest are:

Nigeria	1,957·1
Poland	1,544·4
Brazil	903·6
Iraq	391·5
Yugoslavia	362·8
Mexico	292·4
Egypt	286·9
Sudan	277·1
Zambia	206·4
Tanzania	161·8
Argentina	130·9
Morocco	108·4
Jordan	102·5
Gabon	90·5
Zaire	87·0
Congo	86·9
Mozambique	83·7
Iran	82·2
Peru	81·4
Guyana	70·7
Angola	67·6
Ecuador	59·6
Cuba	58·6
Philippines	55·5
Cameroon	46·1

Serbian Companies

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies based in Serbia currently operate from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: The Department is aware of 36 companies in the United Kingdom that are "persons connected with Serbia or Montenegro" for the purposes of United Kingdom sanctions legislation.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action the Government have taken to ensure that no Serbian company is trading in the United Kingdom in violation of UN sanctions.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom has implemented the following legislation in respect of UN sanctions. It applies to all United Kingdom companies.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom policy position on the carbon tax put to the Joint Energy and Environment European Council meeting on 23 to 24 April; what proposals were put forward by the Ministers of other EC member states; in what respects agreement has not been reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West

(Mr. Bellingham) on 5, May Official Report, columns 109-10, reporting on the recent joint session of the Energy and Environment Councils.

Timeshare

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the organisations that have made representations to him over timeshare accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I have received many representations concerning timeshare accommodation. My Department sought representations from interested parties in connection with the Timeshare Act 1992 and the draft EC Commission directive on timeshare which is currently under discussion in Brussels.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what will be the increase in radioactive dosage to the surrounding area involved in the application by Nuclear Electric to set up an incinerator to dispose of contaminated oil at Trawsfynydd power station.

Mr. Eggar: The environmental statement which accompanied the application stated that the increase in radioactive dosage to the most exposed member of the public would be in the region of 0·005 microSieverts per annum. This is equivalent to 0·0002 per cent. of natural background radiation.

Wood Imports (Thailand)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of hard and softwood imports from Thailand for each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom imports of hardwood from Thailand were worth £0·79 million in 1990, £0·16 million in 1991 and £0·32 million in 1992. The United Kingdom has not imported any softwood from Thailand in the last three years.

Post Office Counters Ltd.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with Post Office Counters Ltd. about the method of payment of pensions and benefits following privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: No decision has been made to privatise Post Office Counters Ltd. and the Post Office review is considering both public and private sector options. A statement will be made to the House in due course. In the meantime, I continue to have regular discussions with senior Post Office management on a wide range of issues.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration has been given to the retention of Post Office Counters in the public sector following privatisation of the rest of the Post Office.

Mr. Leigh: With the exception of Parcelforce, no decision has been made on whether to privatise any part of the Post Office. Within the Post Office review, we are considering private and public sector options.

Leather Goods

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning the penetration into the EC retail market of leather goods manufactured in China, India and elsewhere outside the EC.

Mr. Sainsbury: Figures for the EC retail market for leather goods are not available.

Dividends

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received regarding the trend for companies to offer dividends in the form of advanced scrip issues of shares rather than cash; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department has received one representation about enhanced scrip dividends. Where companies make arrangements giving shareholders the alternative of cash or additional shares, the Department's main concern is that the offer is open on equal terms to all shareholders. It is for company shareholders to consider the merits of the offer and to vote accordingly when the relevant resolution is put to the general meeting.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall), on 28 April, Official Report, columns 415-16, what were the voting figures for each member state recorded in the meeting of the EC's Internal Market Council held on 5 April.

Mr. Needham: No formal votes were taken at the Internal Market Council on 5 April.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms Anderson), on 29 April, Official Report, column 492, when he expects to complete and publish the Government's proposals on assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: I will announce the results of the present review as soon as practicable following the necessary clearance from the European Commission.

Noise

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations the National Physical Laboratory has made into hum noise complaints relating to low frequency noise; and what results were published.

Mr. Leigh: The National Physical Laboratory has not carried out any investigations into hum noise complaints in recent years.

I would refer the hon. Member to the Building Research Establishment, an agency of the Department of the Environment, where I understand some work of this kind is pursued.

Land Rover Exports

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what tariff or other barriers are faced by exports of Land Rover products to the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 April 1993]: The export of Land Rover products to the United States of America is subject to the import tariffs provided for in the United States harmonised tariff schedule.

Vehicle Exports

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received concerning barriers to trade faced by exports of four-wheel drive vehicles to the United States of America; and what action he has taken as a result of those representations.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 April 1993]: Representations have been received from British exporters about proposals to reclassify sports utility vehicles as trucks for US import tariff purposes. Her Majesty's Government have made known their concerns to both the previous and current US Administrations.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how sanctions against the former Yugoslavia, Serbia and Montenegro are enforced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Several Departments are responsible for applying sanctions in the United Kingdom. They act rigorously against any suspected breach of UN sanctions in co-operation with HM Customs and Excise.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what is the estimated value of total imports from former Yugoslavia in each year since 1990 and in 1993 to date;

(2) how many goods bearing labels stating "Made in Yugoslavia" or "Designed and Produced in Yugoslavia" were sold in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990 to date.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 4 May 1993]: United Kingdom imports from Yugoslavia by (a) country of despatch, and (b) country of origin are given in the table.

The country of dispatch is the last country in which the goods were bought or sold before coming to the United Kingdom while the country of origin is the last overseas country in which significant processing took place. The available statistics do not separately identify the country where the goods are made, designed or produced, or how they are labelled.

United Kingdom imports from Yugoslavia[1]

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether wooden butchers' blocks are included in the items which are covered by the complete United Nations embargo against Serbia and Montenegro.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Yes. The export of all goods to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia—Serbia and Montenegro—from the United Kingdom is prohibited. The only exceptions are foodstuffs, medicines and humanitarian aid which are licenced on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sanctions are applied to British companies selling goods made in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Sanctions apply to goods made in the former republics of Yugoslavia—Serbia and Montenegro—which left the republics after the imposition of sanctions on 30 May 1992. Breach of sanctions legislation can lead to the prosecution of companies involved.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards imports of goods bearing labels "Made in Yugoslavia".

Mr. Needham [holding answer 4 May 1993]: It is prohibited to import goods into the United Kingdom from the Republics of Yugoslavia—Serbia and Montenegro—and suspected breaches of sanctions legislation are investigated. However, goods which were imported into the United Kingdom from the former Yugoslavia before the imposition of sanctions on 30 May 1992 are not affected.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many import licences have been issued by his Department for import of goods from (a) the former Yugoslavia, (b) Serbia and (c) Montenegro since 31 May 1992; for what goods; for which companies; and at what total value.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Since 31 May 1992, the Department has issued 762 import licences for goods imported from the former Yugoslavia; 210 covered imports from Serbia and Montenego, mainly personal items of small value. Sanctions apply to all imports from Serbia and Montenegro and licences were issued only for goods exported before 31 May 1992 or where the United Nations gave approval. As regards the rest of the former Yugoslavia, no sanctions are in force; quantitative restrictions apply only to a limited number of goods and the licences issued were mainly for textile products—85 per cent. For reasons of confidentiality, the names of importers cannot be given. Licences are issued by reference to quantity rather than value.

Regional Development Funding

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further discussions he has had on his discussions with the European Commission about the possibility of extending objective 1 status to other parts of the United Kingdom in addition to the current proposals for Merseyside and the highlands and islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 4 May 1993]: The European Commission's proposals for objective 1 regions are currently being considered by a Council working group. The United Kingdom continues to press the case for Devon and Cornwall, rural Wales and South Yorkshire to be added to the list of objective 1 regions when the decision is taken by the Council of Ministers.

Electricity (Restrictive Trade Practices)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations underlay his decision to issue the Electricity (Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976) (Exemption) Order 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 May 1993]: The Electricity (Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976) (Exemption) Order 1993 removes from the scope of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976 certain contracts between coal producers, the electricity generators and the regional electricity companies made before 1 April 1993. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade made the exemption order taking account of the importance the Government attached to securing the future of the British coal industry.

Sour Gas

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research his Department has carried out into the (a) toxicity and (b) inflammability of sour gas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

The offshore safety division of the Health and Safety Executive is currently involved in a number of research projects concerned with deleterious effects on sour gas. Research into the effects of sour gas flammability is also part of general studies on the effects of fire and explosions on offshore structures.

SCOTLAND

Stobhill hospital

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his officials have had with Greater Glasgow health board concerning the application for trust status by Stobhill hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: One of the criteria against which all trust applications are considered is that of long-term viability. Discussions between my officials and Greater Glasgow health board on that aspect of the Stobhill application are on-going.

Infertility

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to set a ceiling on the amount a health board may charge for infertility treatment.

Mr. Stewart: Services are either provided under the national health service, in which case no charge is made, or privately, in which case the charge is determined by the clinic concerned.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received following his rejection of the National Medical Advisory Committee's recommendations that treatment for infertility at the Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow units should be centrally funded.

Mr. Stewart: Representations have been received from right hon. and hon. Members on behalf of constituents, from infertile couples and other individuals and from a body concerned with the interests of those with fertility problems.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many couples received assisted conception treatment in 1992 at each of the Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh and Glasgow units; what was the average cost at each; and what contribution was made by the local health board and the individuals concerned.

Mr. Stewart: Information on the number of couples receiving treatment in 1992 will not be available from the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority for some time yet. However, details of the number of treatment cycles provided during 1991 should be available from the authority in July of this year.

As the treatment at the Aberdeen, Edinburgh and Dundee centres is offered on a private basis, information on average costs and the precise funding arrangements is not held centrally. However, the National Medical Advisory Committee report "Infertility Services in Scotland" shows that patients have been charged £1,450 per treatment cycle at Aberdeen and £1,250 at Edinburgh. At Dundee, patients were asked to consider offering a donation towards the costs of their treatment. No charge is made for treatment at the Glasgow centre which operates within the NHS.

Cancer Screening

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his oral answer of 29 April, Official Report, columns 1153-54, if he will list those persons who will join Dr. Euphemia McGoogan in the inquiry into the inaccurate reporting of cervical smear tests by certain members of the staff of the Inverclyde Royal hospital, Greenock; if he will outline the terms of reference of the inquiry; and when he expects to receive a report of the inquiry.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 4 May at column 35. Dr. McGoogan has indicated that the report should be available by early summer.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to extend cervical and breast cancer screening to teenage girls and women aged 65 years and over; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: There are no plans to extend the age ranges for routine screening. Women are already offered screening for breast cancer at three-yearly intervals between the ages of 50 and 64 years. There is not yet evidence to show that screening younger women for breast cancer is of benefit.

For cervical cancer, health boards have been asked to offer screening to women aged 20 to 60 at no more than five-yearly intervals. In practice, health boards screen on a three-yearly cycle. Any younger women thought to be at risk or women over 60 who do not have a history of satisfactory tests may have a cervical smear under present arrangements.

Cross-border Policing

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to cross-border policing issues; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am today issuing a paper prepared jointly by my Department and that of my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, which examines the issues affecting policing across the border between Scotland and England. At present, police officers may exercise their powers only in the country in which they are based. This presents problems when an officer has to cross the border between England and Scotland in the course of duty. The increasing sophistication and mobility of criminals has served to highlight the problem over recent years.

A recent paper produced by the four border police forces of Dumfries and Galloway, Lothian and Borders, Cumbria and Northumbria helpfully focused the present difficulties. My right hon. and learned Friend and I therefore decided to consider whether there was scope for improving on the present situation. The consultation document seeks views on options to help resolve the difficulties.

The document also touches on jurisdictional issues confronting courts in England and Scotland in relation to cross-border crime, but concludes that this complex subject must be treated separately.

We have invited comments on the paper by 18 June and shall welcome views from everyone with an interest in these issues. I hope that interested parties will respond quickly so that we can identify the best way forward.

Copies of the paper are available to hon. Members in the Library and, as usual, in the Vote Office.

Borgie Estate

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the disposal of Borgie estate by his Department.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Borgie estate was gifted to the nation by the Duke of Sutherland in 1917 for the settlement on the land of returning service men from the 1914-18 war. To take account of changed circumstances, the purposes of the gift were extended in 1960 and the variation to the deed of gift stipulated that if, at any time in the future, the Secretary of State for Scotland should contemplate disposal of the land, he shall first offer it back to the Duke of Sutherland or his successors. Against this background the reconveyance of Borgie estate to Sutherland Estates took place on 28 April 1993, in accordance with Government policy on the disposal of surplus land.

Lung Cancer and Coronary Heart Disease

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current incidence of lung cancer and coronary heart disease in Glasgow.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 May 1993]: A total of 1,179 new cases of lung cancer were registered in respect of residents in the Greater Glasgow health board area in 1991; comparable data are not available for heart disease. Also in 1991, there were 1,043 deaths from lung cancer and 3,100 deaths from ischaemic heart disease in Greater Glasgow.

Astronomical Appointments

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when appointments will be made to the posts of Astronomer Royal for Scotland or Director of the Royal Observatory, Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Advice will be tendered in due course to Her Majesty the Queen on an appointment to the office of Astronomer Royal for Scotland. The Science and Engineering Research Council, for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is responsible, recently made changes to the management structure of the astronomical observatories as a result of which the posts of director of the Royal observatory, Edinburgh and director of the Royal Greenwich observatory have been succeeded by an overall director of observatories. An appointment to this post was made on 15 March 1993.

Tariff Rebate Subsidy

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the terms of reference of the review of the tariff rebate subsidy scheme to the Scottish islands in which his department is involved; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether representations have been sought from Orkney islands council and Shetland islands council in respect of the review into the tariff rebate subsidy scheme for shipping services to the Scottish islands.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 5 May 1993]: My right hon. Friend is at present considering the need to review the existing arrangements under which he provides financial assistance for shipping services in the highlands and islands. Any such review would involve consultation with local interests, including the islands councils.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much will be spent or has been spent in each year from 1990-91 to 1995-98 on (a) stage 1 ESAs, (b) stage 2 ESAs, (c) stage 3 ESAs and (d) stage 4 ESAs, identifying how much of the total is allocated for the public access payments; what is the amount to be spent on (i) nitrate-sensitive areas, (ii) the moorland scheme, (iii) the habitat improvement scheme, (iv) set-aside management identifying how much of the total will be for public access payments and (v) organic farming in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 May 1993]: There is a single budget for ESAs in Scotland. Expenditure was approximately £1 million in 1990-91, £1·1 million in 1991-92 and £1·1 million in 1992-93. Planned expenditure is £5·3 million in 1993-94, £7·7 million in 1994-95 and £7·9 million in 1995-96. There is no nitrate-sensitive areas scheme. Consideration of the need for any agri-chemicals measures awaits the results of water quality surveys expected to be completed at the end of this year. My Department has issued for consultation proposals for schemes on heather moorland extensification, habitat creation, the management of set-aside land, and organic farming. Planned expenditure on these proposed measures is £3 million in 1994-95, and £5·8 million in 1995-96. The allocation between the schemes will be decided in the light of the consultation process.

Forestry

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of tax relief given for afforestation in 1987-88 and the value of grants paid to private woodland owners in 1991-92; and what was the amount of new planting in 1991-92 as a percentage of that undertaken in 1987-88.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 5 May 1993]: The exact value of the tax relief claimed for forestry operations, including afforestation and restocking, before forestry was removed from the scope of taxation in 1988-89, is not recorded, but it was estimated to be about £10 million in 1987-88. In addition, private woodland owners received grants of £9 million in the same year. The total Government support was, therefore, about £19 million, which is equivalent to £25 million at 1991-92 prices. Private woodland owners received grants of £17 million in 1991-92, representing about 70 per cent. of the total support in 1987-88.

A total of 14,147 hectares of new planting was grant-aided in 1991-92, which was 59 per cent. of the area in 1987-88. The total area planted with grant-aid in 1991-92, including restocking, was 21,978 hectares, which was 77 per cent. of the area planted in 1987-88.

Lanarkshire Development Agency (Consultants)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the consultants used by Lanarkshire development agency over the last two years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 5 May 1993]: While expenditure on consultancy studies above certain delegated authorities requires the approval, respectively, of Scottish Enterprise and the Scottish Office, the choice and use of consultants is essentially a matter for the local enterprise companies themselves; and the Scottish Office holds no central record of the use of consultants. I suggest, therefore, that the hon. Member should take this matter up direct with Lanarkshire development agency.

HEALTH

Regional Health Authorities

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what moneys have been paid to the Audit Commission by regional health authorities and her Department in the last five years; and if she will break down the figures by the categories of service provided.

Mr. Sackville: The statutory external audit function was transferred to the Audit Commission from the Department of Health with effect from 1 October 1990. The Audit Commission levies charges directly to each health body. Audit costs for the part year 1990-91 were not analysed separately. For the financial year 1991-92, the total expenditure recorded in the financial statements of regional health authorities was £1,217,614. This figure does not include expenditure by other national health service bodies such as NHS trusts and district health authorities. No further information is available centrally of this expenditure by category of service provided.

Payments were made by the Department for work associated with the paving legislation and for pensions of staff transferred to the Audit Commission.

Patients

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the methods presently used to measure patient activity levels; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so.

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will now make it her policy to ensure that all hand-pieces used by general dental practitioners are autoclaved after being used on each patient;

(2) if she will now make it her policy to ensure that all general dental practitioners use disposable gloves which are not re-used for successive patients.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has already issued guidance which covers both the autoclaving of hand pieces and the use of disposable gloves, the maintenance of clinical standards is primarily a matter for the dental profession. The latest advice from the Department is contained in "Guidance for Clinical Health Care Workers —Protection Against Infection with HIV and Hepatitis Viruses" of January 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists, who have not given notice to leave the dental list, have given written notice to each family health services authority to terminate or deregister some or all of their capitation arrangements for child patients in each week since 20 November; how many dentists have deregistered patients; and how many patients have been deregistered.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 April 1993]: The information provided weekly by family health services authorities since July 1992 shows that in the period up to 23 April 1993, 201 dentists have given written notification to deregister 1,421 child patients. The tables set out, by FHSA, for each week since 20 November 1992, the number of new dentists who have deregistered child patients and the total number of child patients deregistered by all dentists.

Notes:
Dentists who first de-registered patients between week ending 3 July 1992 and week ending 20 November 1992 are not included in this table, even if they de-registered patients between 21 November 1992 and 23 April 1993 since each dentist is only counted once on the first occasion he de-registered a patient. In the 68 FHSAs not included in this table, no dentist first de-registered a patient between 21 November 1992 and 23 April 1993.
A small number of FHSAs have submitted revised figures. These amendments have been included in the cumulative totals but not in the weekly totals. The sum of the weekly totals does not therefore equal the cumulative total.

Hospital Support Services

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts for contracted-out hospital support services have been affected by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of dispensed drugs cost the national health service less than the current prescription charge; and what was the proportion in 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: The prescription charge is not, and never has been, directly related either to the particular item prescribed or to the actual cost to the national health service of dispensing it. It is an amount which successive Governments have thought it reasonable for those who can afford to do so to contribute towards the cost of NHS pharmaceutical services. In 1993-94, an estimated 50 per cent. of prescribed items dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors will cost the NHS less than the prescription charge of £4·25. Data for 1979 are not available.

Asthma

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the trend in the incidence of asthma in children.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is available on trends for asthma occurrence in children in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: There is some evidence for a gradual increase in the incidence of asthma in children in England and Wales over recent years—weekly returns service of the Birmingham research unit of the Royal College of General Practitioners 1987-91. There is also some evidence that hospital admissions have increased over the last decade. Caution is required in assessing trend data from routine sources, because of changes over time in the data collection systems and in the likelihood of asthma being correctly diagnosed.

In-vitro Fertilisation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-vitro fertilisation and gamete intrafallopian transfer treatments were carried out on the national health service and privately in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Information about the total number of treatments given in the United Kingdom is shown in the tables. It cannot be broken down into categories requested.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many centres were licensed to provide artificial insemination by donor in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sackville: Centres which provide artificial insemination by donor have been licensed only since August 1991 when the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority assumed its full powers under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990. During the transitional period of one year from 1 August 1991, 85 such clinics were operating and applied to be licensed by the authority. Seventy-nine clinics in England are currently licensed by the authority.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has promoted into the impact of high concentration ozone levels on human health in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: The advisory group on the medical aspects of air polluton episodes considered the evidence on the medical effects of exposure to ground level ozone in its first report which was published in August 1991. Copies are available in the Library.

The advisory group concluded that the ozone levels experienced in the United Kingdom, which are at their highest during hot weather, are unlikely to produce any permanent lung damage. The group made a number of recommendations for research, including basic research on the biochemical and cellular mechanisms involved in the effects of ozone on the lung; research on the effects of low concentrations of ozone upon man; and epidemiological studies on the possible relationship between exposure to air pollutants in general, and ozone in particular, on health. The Department has raised this with the Medical Research Council which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom.

Mental Hospitals (Discharges)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish statistical details relating to the residence of persons who have been discharged from long-stay mental health beds and hospitals since 1986.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available in the form requested. Information is available on the pattern of destination of discharged patients in 1989-90 and is given in the Department of Health's "Government Response to the third report from the Health Committee Session 1990-91" para 45, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Sexual Health

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to promote sexual health initiatives with young people; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The White Paper, "The Health of the Nation", includes the challenging target to reduce the rate of conceptions amongst the under-16s by at least 50 per cent. by the year 2000. Measures which are effective in substantially reducing pregnancies in the under-16s can be expected to have a similar effect on unwanted pregnancies in the over-16s.

A range of initiatives is underway both nationally and locally to support progress towards "The Health of the Nation" targets and objectives. Guidance to the national health service draws attention to the need for separate, less formal family planning services for young people, with staff experienced in dealing with the particular needs of this group and their problems. Progress in the NHS is being monitored. The family planning section of the HIV/AIDS and sexual health key area handbook, published by the Department in January 1993 and issued to all health authorities, focuses on the best ways of providing effective services, particularly for young people, and includes many examples of good practice. It also suggests that health authorities responsible for purchasing health care should consider commissioning at least two clinic sessions per week dedicated to young people. A copy is available in the Library.

The White Paper makes clear that everyone—parents, health services, local authorities, the voluntary and educational sectors and the Government—need to work together to achieve "The Health of the Nation" targets. We particularly welcome in this context my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education's decision to issue last month for consultation a draft revised circular on sex education in schools.

Grants have been awarded to enable voluntary organisations to carry forward projects related to the aims of "The Health of the Nation" White Paper. These organisations include the Family Planning Association and Brook Advisory Centres, which provide services directly to young people under 25. In addition to the provision of designated young people's health care services, there is a need for effective sexual health education programmes. With this in mind, a new three-year project grant has been awarded to the Sex Education Forum to facilitate the development of a centralised information network for all those involved in sex education.

The Department will be looking further at ways in which the quality and range of family planning services may be developed and improved. This includes addressing issues such as training, the provision of better information for patients, and how best to meet the needs of young people.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sexual health targets are set by health authorities; and how these are decided.

Mr. Sackville: "The Health of the Nation" White Paper sets challenging targets for improvement in the key area of sexual health. National health service authorities are already acting to implement the recommendations in "First Steps for the NHS" and will be working with the National Health Service Management Executive to apply the national targets at regional and, where appropriate, district and family health service authority level.

Children in Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were in local authority care in each local authority in England during 1992.

Mr. Yeo: Information is not yet available about the numbers of children looked after at 31 March 1992 by individual local authorities. However, the Children Act Report 1992 contains estimated totals for England by legal status, including whether subject to a care order.

The number of children who were in the care of each local authority in 1991 are given in "Children in Care of local authorities year ending 31 March 1991, England".

Copies of the publications referred to are in the Library.

Mental Health Hospitals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has funded to identify (a) contact with community mental teams, (b) residential accommodation and (c) unmet needs for long-stay patients in mental health hospitals, within each United Kingdom regional health authority.

Mr. Yeo: Responsibility for assessing the needs of mentally ill people rests with district health authorities and local authority social services departments. Department of Health funded-research concerning community care for mentally ill people is included in "Community Care: Findings from Department of Health funded research 1988-1992", a copy of which is available in the Library. The national health service research and development programme supports several studies on services available to long-stay mentally ill patients, alternative accommodation and arrangements for discharge. This is being managed by the Yorkshire regional health authority, and the hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Bryan Askew, the chairman of the health authority, for details.

Waiting Lists

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the current information available about surgical waiting lists in (a) Rochdale district health authority and (b) each of the regional health authorities in England.

Mr. Sackville: Provisional waiting list figures for each regional health authority at 31 December 1992 were published on 9 February 1993 in press release H93/547. Information on Rochdale health authority can be found in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England at 30 September 1992", copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on achieving the commitments on waiting lists as laid out in the patients charter.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service has been extremely successful in meeting the waiting time commitments in the patient's charter. The latest provisional figures show that there are no patients waiting two years or more for in-patient or day case treatment in any region. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 4 May, at 31 March 1993 there were no patients waiting more than 18 months for a hip replacement or cataract operation and only eight patients waiting more than 18 months for a knee replacement operation.

Tranquilliser Addiction

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to compensate tranquilliser addiction patients; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what services are available within the NHS for treatment and counselling for those affected by tranquilliser addiction.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 May 1993]: We have no plans to compensate such patients. Health authorities, including family health services authorities, are responsible for ensuring that a range of services are available to meet the needs of people who wish to withdraw from tranquillisers. These are provided by both primary care teams and the secondary care sector, and include counselling, withdrawal therapy and the gradual replacement of tranquillisers by non-prescribing interventions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Capital Investment

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the planned capital investment in cash and real terms by (a) Government and (b) private sources in each of the non-departmental bodies sponsored by his Ministry and engaged in research, for each year since 1978 and the proposed expenditure for the next three years beginning 1993.

Mr. Gummer: The information that is available on capital investment by the relevant bodies without incurring disproportionate cost is as follows. The data cannot be divided between Government and private sources.

	Actuals			Projected
	1990-91 £ million	1991-92 £ million	1992-93 £ million	1993-94 £ million

Research

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what definitions he uses of near-market, strategic and basic research with respect to the activities of each non-departmental public body currently in receipt of funds from his Ministry.

Mr. Gummer: All research and development funded by my Department is categorised according to the definitions of the "Frascati Manual"—the measurement of scientific and technical activities—published by the OECD, Paris 1981. The manual identifies three types of research and development work—basic research, applied research and experimental development. Applied research may have either strategic or specified aims and be subdivided accordingly.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the cost to non-departmental bodies sponsored by his Ministry of the 1992 devaluation of the pound sterling as this affects funding sourced from international subscriptions; and what changes have been made to research programme budgets in consequence.

Mr. Gummer: I have made no such estimates and I am not aware of any such costs.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Government-funded research stations relating to (a) agriculture, (b) horticulture and (c) food have either closed or been lost through amalgamation since 1978; and how many jobs in (i) research and scientific grades and (ii) other grades were shed as a consequence of each closure each year.

Mr. Gummer: The numbers of Government-funded research stations which have closed or amalgamated since 1978 are as follows:

Stations relating to:	Closed	Amalgamated
Agriculture	10	11
Horticulture	5	8
Food	2	1

Statistics on job losses are not held centrally in the form requested, nor are they monitored site by site in every instance. Moreover, some losses will have arisen for other reasons and some staff will have been redeployed by parent organisations.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the Government's investment plans with respect to agriculture, horticulture and food research for each year until 1996.

Mr. Gummer: My Department's estimates of proposed expenditure on agriculture, horticulture and food research are £123·9 million in 1994-95 and £126·4 million in 1995-96.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was total Government expenditure and non-departmental external expenditure in agriculture, horticulture and food research for each year since 1978 in cash and real terms; and what proportion of the total funding requirement of non-departmental research bodies linked to his Ministry has been met from external non-governmental sources since 1978.

Mr. Gummer: I have given details of total Government expenditure on agriculture, horticulture and food research in response to another of the hon. Member's questions. Comprehensive information is not available on non-departmental external expenditure. The amount of funding met from external non-governmental sources as a proportion of the total research and development budget for the non-departmental research bodies linked to my Department is as follows.

External non-governmental funding as a proportion (per cent.) of total R&D budget

Horticultural Development Council	100·0	100·0	100·0
Apple and Pear Research Council	100·0	100·0	100·0
Meat and Livestock Commission	48·3	55·3	55·0
Horticulture Research International	23·6	22·6	23·9
National Institute of Agricultural Botany	68·0	36·2	33·2
Home Grown Cereals Authority	100·0	100·0	100·0
Royal Botanic Gardens (Kew)	0·7	2·4	5·1
Potato Marketing Board	90·0	93·8	97·1

Comparable figures for years before 1990-91 are not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the policy underlying the current research programmes and how each programme ranks in terms of the priority he attaches to them.

Mr. Gummer: Research is undertaken to support the Ministry's aims which are to protect the public, to improve the economic performance of the agriculture, fishing and food industries, enhance the rural and marine environment, prevent flooding and coastal erosion and protect farmed animals and fish.

The Priorities Board for Research and Development in Agriculture and Food advises Agriculture Ministers and the chairman of the Agriculture and Food Research Council on priorities for research and development and the allocation of research and development budgets. The board's recommendations guide the allocation of resources in the research and development programme.

Research and development strategy documents for agriculture and food are published by the Ministry. These are available in the House of Commons Library.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research establishments and projects which have received funding from either the Agriculture Research Council or Horticulture International in the last year; and if he will list the amounts involved.

Mr. Gummer: Horticulture Research International is not a funding body. The research establishments which received funding from the Agricultural and Food Research Council in the last year, together with the amounts involved, are as follows:

	£ million
Institute for Animal Health	12·58
Institute of Animal Physiology and Genetics Research	14·01
Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research	8·34
Institute of Arable Crops Research	12·35
Horticulture Research International	2·57
Institute of Plant Science Research	9·67
Institute of Food Research	12·73
Silsoe Research Institute	5·34

In addition, the Agricultural and Food Research Council's research grant expenditure with universities and other academic institutes amounted to £23·71 million.

Information on individual projects can be found in the AFRC handbook, copies of which are available in the Library of the House of Commons.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many personnel were employed in

(a) agriculture, (b) horticulture and (c) food research in (i) research and scientific grades and (ii) other grades, in each area in each year since 1978.

Mr. Gummer: Staffing statistics are not kept on the basis requested and so the information is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research programmes since 1990 which have been subject to a cut in funding by 5 or more per cent. and those programmes which have been cancelled, including those which were never brought on stream.

Mr. Gummer: The level of funding by my Department is kept under constant review both during each year and from year to year, in order to make the best possible use of available resources. Changes in the funding of individual research programmes are an inevitable consequence of this policy. Details of expenditure by my Department, both increases and decreases, for individual research programmes since 1991-92 are given in the table. Comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Research group	1991-92 £ million	1992-93 £ million	1993-94 £ million[1]

[1] Estimate.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations in the (a) public and (b) private sectors to which the Government make funds available for research with respect to agriculture, horticulture and food.

Mr. Gummer: A record of the organisations to which the Government make funds available for agriculture, horticulture and food research is not kept centrally. My Department, however, contracts research mainly with the following categories of research organisations:

Research Councils
Other Government Departments
Higher Education Institutes
Private industries and companies
Public companies and corporations
Research Associations, Authorities, Boards and Commissions
Non-industrial Research Institutes
MAFF Agencies, ie ADAS, Central Science Laboratory, Central Veterinary Laboratory
MAFF's Food Science Laboratory

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total Government expenditure for agriculture, horticulture and food research for each year since 1978 in cash and real terms; and what funding is to be made available to the Agriculture and Food Research Council and Horticulture Research International for the five years beginning 1993.

Mr. Gummer: Government funding for research and development on agriculture, horticulture and food is mainly directed through the Agricultural and Food Research Council—AFRC—the Scottish Office Agriculture and Food Department and the Department of Agriculture, Northern Ireland and my own Department. Expenditure on such research from these sources is given in the table, in cash and real terms:

Year	Cash £ million	Real terms[1] £ million
1978-79	n/a	n/a
1979-80	n/a	n/a

1993-94	288·2	271·1

[1] using the GDP inflator (1991-92 = 100)

A number of other Government bodies fund research into agriculture, horticulture and food but figures on their expenditure are not held centrally.

The amount of funding made available to AFRC from the science budget of the Office of Science and Technology and from my Department amounts to £145 million in 1993-94. Funding available to Horticulture Research International amounts to £13·5 million in 1993-94. The allocation of funds in future years will be notified to the AFRC and HRI as soon as decisions have been reached.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was Government expenditure in nominal and real terms for each year since 1978 for research into (a) the relationship between farming and the environment, (b) organic farming, (c) whole crop utilisation and novel crops including alternative uses for arable crops, (d) raising the productive potential of the principal agricultural commodities, (e) food safety and (f) animal welfare.

Mr. Gummer: Information regarding Government expenditure is given in the table. Details of expenditure are available for the financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93 only. The spend for 1993-94 has yet to be finalised. Prior to 1991-92 the data were not recorded in the required format and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

	1991-92 Cash £ million	1991-92 Real terms[1] £ million	1992-93 Cash £ million	1992-93 Real terms[1] £ million

[1] Using GDP deflator (1991-92 = 100).

Notes

The data presented are of direct relevance to the topic areas identified. Other research work, not included here, also touches upon these areas and is of indirect relevance.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of the total expenditure of his Ministry for each year since April 1991 and over the next three years is accounted for by research and development projects aimed at reducing the cost of the common agricultural policy to the consumer and to public funds.

Mr. Gummer: The question is not answerable in the terms in which it is posed. Reduction in the cost of the CAP is an objective which pervades a very wide range of MAFF's policies, many of which are supported by research and development programmes.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of his Ministry's research funds for each year since 1978 has been expanded on (a) pure and (b) applied projects.

Mr. Gummer: As I have indicated in response to another of the hon. Member's questions, my Department's research funds are classified by the definitions of the "Frascati Manual" and details are set out in the table.

Year	Basic research £ million	Applied strategic £ million	Research specific £ million	Experimental development £ million	Total £ million

Central Science Laboratory

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff are currently employed in research work by the Central Science Laboratory; and what is his projection for the number to be employed when relocation is complete on a single site in York.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to the Central Science Laboratory and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from Dr. P. I. Stanley to Dr. Gavin Strang, dated 6 May 1993:

The Central Science Laboratory currently employs 266 staff engaged on research and development work.

It was announced by the Minister on 31 March that the Food Science Laboratories at Norwich and Torry will merge with the Central Science Laboratory to form an enlarged Agency which will come into operation on 1 April 1994. There are no plans at present, however, to relocate any of the Norwich or Torry staff to Yorkshire.

My projection for the number of research staff to be employed in Yorkshire in the financial year 1997-98, when relocation will be complete, is 265.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the relationship between the Central Science Laboratory work and that of non-departmental bodies sponsored by his Department; and if he will list the projects on which the Central Science Laboratory is currently engaged.

Mr. Gummer: Responsibility for this matter is delegated to the Central Science Laboratory and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from Dr. P. I. Stanley to Dr. Gavin Strang, dated 6 May 1993:

The Central Science Laboratory is involved in collaborative research with the Agricultural and Food Research Council's Institute of Arable Crops Research.

The projects on which the Central Science Laboratory is currently engaged are:

Studies in resistance in crop pests,
Effects of pesticides on beneficial insects,
Barley yellow dwarf virus in Autumn and Winter,
Seed weevil and pod midge.

Postgraduate Students

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his Ministry's postgraduate studentships in agriculture and food studies for the academic year beginning 1 October 1991 directly covered or related substantially to (a) the relationship between farming and the environment, (b) organic farming, (c) whole crop utilisation and novel crops including alternative uses for arable crops, (d) raising the productive potential of the principal agricultural commodities, (e) food safety and (f) animal welfare.

Mr. Gummer: The number of postgraduate research studentships awarded by my Department in these areas in the academic year beginning 1 October 1991 was as follows:

	Number
(a) relationship between farming and the environment	12
(b) organic farming	1
(c) whole crop utilisation and novel crops including alternative uses for arable crops	—
(d) raising the production potential of the principal agricultural commodities	23
(e) food safety	7
(f) animal welfare	6

Horticulture Research Institute

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he proposes to introduce legislation to merge the Horticulture Research Institute into a single organisational structure; and what is the Horticulture Research Institute's present organisational status within his Ministry.

Mr. Gummer: Horticulture Research International already operates as a single organisational structure. It integrates under single management the staff and facilities of the former Institute of Horticultural Research of the Agricultural and Food Research Council and the former experimental horticulture stations of the Agricultural Development Advisory Service. It is a next steps non-departmental public body sponsored by my Department and governed by a management statement. Legislation will be introduced as soon as possible to establish Horticulture Research International as a statutory corporation and to transfer seconded staff to its direct employment.

EC Agriculture Council

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) of 28 April, Official Report, column 409, what were the voting figures for each member state recorded in the meeting of the European Community's Agriculture Council held on 26 and 27 April.

Mr. Curry: The following decisions were adopted unanimously:

ending of the milk co-responsibility levy;
extension of support prices for dried fodder and cauliflowers by one month; permission for Portugal to introduce a national aid for wine distillation.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployed People (Travelling Expenses)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the maximum daily travelling expenses that can be claimed by unemployed people who participate in job search seminars or in job review workshops when they travel by (a) public transport or (b) private transport; what entitlement participants in both schemes have to travel expenses to enable them to attend the follow-up support sessions that are provided by the seminars and workshops; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 6 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about travel expenses for participants who attend job search seminars and Job Review Workshops. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Both programmes are of short duration, normally lasting two full days with some additional follow up. They are designed to help short term unemployed people find work more quickly. The seminars and workshops are run by organisations from the public, private and voluntary sectors, under contract to the Employment Service. As I explained in my earlier reply of 14 April, people who attend are paid their travelling expenses to the main sessions and to the follow up events. This is done by the programme providers who re-imburse participants the cost of travelling from their homes to the seminar or Workshop. The providers then recover this money from the Employment Service.

Participants are expected to travel by the most cost effective mode of transport, normally standard class public transport. If participants prefer to use their own car or motorcycle they are paid a mileage allowance of 16p per mile provided this is cost effective, for example, where public transport is poor or there is good reason to use a vehicle. Otherwise if they choose to use their own transport they will receive the equivalent public transport cost.

People with a disability problem which affects their mobility may claim travelling expenses at the mileage rate if they wish to use their own private vehicle. They may also be re-imbursed parking fees. Taxi fares will also be paid where a person's disability prevents them using either public transport or private vehicle.

There is no upper limit laid down which states the maximum daily travelling allowance that can be claimed by participants. There is however a network of job search seminar and Job Review Workshop provision throughout the country and we would expect people to be offered places at a convenient location.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Labour Statistics

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the total labour force, the numbers unemployed and the numbers self-employed and employed in manufacturing and service sectors by standard industrial classification of the employment source in (a) 1963, (b) 1974, (c) 1979 and (d) the most recent period for which information is available; and what were the percentage changes in each sector between each of those successive dates.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have been in continuous employment in the same job for (i) six months, (ii) one year, (iii) two years, (iv) three years, (v) four years and (vi) five years; and what is the breakdown of the figures between manufacturing industry and the retail trades.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information on length of time in current job based on the labour force survey is given in the table:

Great Britain, Autumn 1992 not seasonally adjusted.

Thousands

	All in Employment		Manufacturing industry		Retail trade
	Men	Women	Men	Women	Men	Women
6 months or more	12,484	9,885	3,471	1,307	976	1,438
1 year or more	11,737	9,090	3,288	1,213	895	1,296
2 years or more	10,585	7,793	3,012	1,070	762	1,052
5 years or more	7,431	4,716	2,118	632	467	571

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish the latest figures for employment of people with disabilities, as a proportion of the total work force, for (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector, and for employment classifications within these sectors; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the 1993-94 budget for each training and enterprise council in England.

Mr. McLoughlin: Regional offices of the training, enterprise and education directorate are currently finalising contracts with training and enterprise councils for 1993-94 budgets and the information is not yet available.

It has been decided that TEC level information should be released publicly only six months after the beginning of the contracting year. The information must remain commercially confidential while TECs are negotiating with their providers. The information requested on allocations for 1993-94 will therefore be publicly available on 1 October 1993.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she will publish the draft TEC operating agreement for 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: A copy of the TEC operating agreement for 1993-94 is available in the Library.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make it her policy to allow training and enterprise councils three-year plans for funding and planning and for arranging provision for training managers locally; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 5 May 1993]: Subject to the money being voted by Parliament, each training and enterprise council is guaranteed a minimum level of funding for the main adult programmes and their local initiative fund over three years. This should allow TECs to plan local provision with confidence.

Training

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to extend training credit schemes to adults.

Mr. McLoughlin: The use of training credits within adult training programmes is already being tested by a number of training and enterprise councils. TECs were informed last November that they were free to deliver training for work through adult credit systems. The Government policy is to encourage TECs to consider adult credits in appropriate circumstances.

Radiation Emergencies

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many sites have been exempted from regulation 3 of the Public Information for Radiation Emergency Regulations 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: No sites are exempted from regulation 3 of the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulation 1992—PIRER. In fact, there are no powers to exempt employers from regulation 3 of PIRER except for that provided under regulation 5 which is vested in my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and can be exercised only in the interest of national security.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list each incident in the United Kingdom since 1963 that would have qualified as a radiation emergency if regulation 2 of the Public Information for Radiation Emergency Regulations 1992 had been in force.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is thought that there have not been any incidents in the United Kingdom since 1963 that would have qualified as a radiation emergency under regulation 2 of the Public Information for Radiation Emergencies Regulations 1992. However, it is not possible to provide the information required to verify this without incurring disproportionate costs.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes have occurred in the past year in the way that unemployment figures are administratively processed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The basis of the monthly unemployment statistics produced by the Employment Department remains as it has been since October 1982: a count of the number of people claiming unemployment-related benefits at Employment Service local offices on the day of the count.

Law Students

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether students taking bar finals and Law Society finals are eligible for the career development loans scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Career development loans—CDLs—can and are being used to fund individuals taking their bar and Law Society finals. The participating banks may issue suitable clients with CDLs which support up to 12 months of study, including 12 months of a longer course. In addition training and enterprise councils may sponsor applications for up to two years of study.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the percentage quota of disabled people employed by each local area authority in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Tables showing the number and percentage of registered disabled people employed by a wide range of individual employers in the public sector, including local authorities, are published annually in Employment Gazette. The figures are published with the agreement of the employers concerned. The latest available figures, which relate to 1 June 1992, are in the April 1993 Employment Gazette, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many local authorities in England and Wales have met the 3 per cent. quota of disabled workers set out in the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 in each year since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 6 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of local authorities in England and Wales who have employed a three per cent. Quota of disabled people in each year since 1979. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information you requested is set out in the attached table.

The information relates to 1 June each year and is taken from data published in the Employment Gazette in respect of individual employers in the public sector.

However, the figures do not give a complete picture of the extent to which people with disabilities are employed by local authorities. Quota figures reflect only the employment of people with disabilities who chose to register under the 1944 legislation. Many eligible people with disabilities are not registered.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Health and Safety

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase the complement of the inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: Details of planned staffing to 1 April 1994 in the Health and Safety Executive are contained in the "Health and Safety Commission Plan of Work 1993-94 and beyond" due to be published shortly. This will indicate that the number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive is planned to rise from 1,532 at 1 April 1993 to 1,685 at 1 April 1994.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average duration of a low-flying sortie by a fast jet.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Approximately 45 minutes.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and dates of periods of covert monitoring of low-flying operations conducted by Royal Air Force police since 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1987 the RAF police have carried out covert surveys at the following locations over the following periods.

Air Accidents

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the rate of major accidents per 10,000 flying hours in each year since 1987 for (a) Royal Air Force fast jet aircraft and (b) all British military fast jet aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Major accident rates per 10,000 flying hours—fast jets[1]

Year	RAF	All Services
1988	0·86	0·82

HMS Eaglet

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of HMS Eaglet and the Royal Naval Reserve in Liverpool.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 20 April, Official Report, columns 169-70, and to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Sir K. Speed) on 20 April, Official Report, column 54.

Hunting

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the percentage increase in the cost of licences to hunt on Ministry of Defence land in 1991-92; and when the cost of licences was previously increased.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Each licence issued by my Department is costed separately. The total amount received by my Department for these licences in 1991-92 was £729·85 which represent an increase of some 973 per cent. over the amount received in 1990-91. The charge for individual licences are reviewed at different times.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas designated as sites of special scientific interest where his Department has issued a licence to hunt.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has issued licences to hunt on the following areas which include sites of special scientific interest.

Otterburn, Northumberland[1]
Ash Brookwood Heaths, Surrey
Broadmoor to Bagshot Woods and Heaths, Berkshire/ Surrey
Thursley Hankley and Frensham, Surrey
Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire
Basingstoke Canal Eelmoor, Hampshire
Colony Bog and Bagshot Heath, Surrey
Conford Moor, Hampshire
Woolmer Forest, Hampshire

[1] The Otterburn Training Area includes 10 sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Army personnel from the Royal Military College of Science, Shrivenham, are permitted to hunt in duty hours.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personnel from the Royal Military College of Science, Shrivenham, are permitted to take part in beagling in duty hours, which is a recognised Army sport.

Costs

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the charges for personnel from non-mounted units to use Ministry of Defence horses and equipment were last reviewed; when they were last increased; and whether the charges reflect the full economic cost to his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The charges for personnel from non-mounted units for the use of Ministry of Defence horses and equipment were last reviewed in October 1992 following an increase in July 1991. The charges are set so as to recover the additional costs involved.

Military Bands

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what briefings were given in the first three months of last year by senior officers to military bandsmen on the effect of a change of Government on the number of military bands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Operation Epsilon

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to the security implications of releasing transcripts of the Farm Hall tapes of conversations of German atomic scientists in the second world war recorded under Operation Epsilon, prior to their release.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The documents were originally "retained by Department" under section 3(4) of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967 on the grounds of national security. They were reviewed in 1992, and it was judged all sensitivity had lapsed and that they could be released into the public domain.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the chief executive of the Meteorological Office executive agency for the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The agency has been set a range of quality and financial targets to ensure that it delivers progressive improvements in the provision of weather related services.

The key quality targets set for the Meteorological Office during the period 1993-94 are to achieve 80 per cent. of all business area targets for customer satisfaction, forecast accuracy and timeliness; produce a charter standard for public services; provide timely and apt advice on meteorology and climate issues to Ministers and the general public; to progress the research programme and to satisfy customer requirements to schedule and agreed standards; and to initiate a rolling programme of reviews of scientific and technical standards throughout the agency.

The financial targets are to reduce net operating costs to £45,700,000—a 1 per cent. reduction on the 1992-93 budget; increase efficiency by 2.5 per cent. through improvements in quality of service, increased volume of service and reduced unit costs; achieve an 8 per cent. increase in uptake of meteorological services to £18,600,000, as measured by cash revenue generated from commercial services to the public, industry and commerce, excluding the Civil Aviation Authority and Department of the Environment; achieve a 19 per cent. increase to £6,700,000 in the gross contribution of commercial services invoiced revenue to offsetting core costs and overheads.

It is also planned that the output costs of all key activities using the new financial and management information system will be made available in 1993-94.

SOCIAL SECURITY

War Disablement Pensioners

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what savings he expects to make from the abolition of the lump-sum payments to war disablement pensioners with a noise-induced hearing loss assessed at less than 20 per cent;

(2) if he will estimate the number of ex-service personnel with a noise-induced hearing loss of less than 20 per cent. who will no longer be eligible for support following changes to the war disablement pension scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The assumption underlying the policy decision was that, in 1993-94, some 10,000 people would not qualify under the new rules who would have qualified under the old, resulting in savings of £20 million which have been used to meet the estimated cost of removing completely rank differentials in war disablement pensions from 12 April 1993.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number of existing war disablement pensioners will receive uprating of £5 per week; what number will receive the uprating of 84p per week; and what number will receive the intermediate upratings of their pension.

Miss Widdecombe: As a result of the abolition of rank differentials from 12 April 1993, an increase of up to £5 a week has been paid to war disablement pensioners depending on their previous rank and level of disablement; for example, a 100 per cent. disabled ex-private will have received an extra £5 a week, whilst a 40 per cent. disabled ex-sergeant will have received an extra £1·86. About 200,000 pensioners have benefited from this change, the most severely disabled lower ranks getting the most. These increases are additional to the general increase in war pensions of 3·6 per cent. under the normal uprating. Precise detail of the numbers in each of the many categories concerned is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The previously announced increase of 84p per week related to the war disablement pensions of non-commissioned officers only and was subsumed in the increases consequential upon the total abolition of rank differentials.

Income Support

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the £5 earnings disregard for unemployed people who are receiving income support applies to the earnings of each individual member of a two-person household; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The £5 disregard applies individually to each member of a couple; where both partners undertake part-time employment, the total disregard available on their earnings is therefore £10.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support claimants who were (a) unemployed people claiming income support and/or unemployment benefit, (b) lone parents, (c) people receiving a disability premium, (d) people receiving severe disablement allowance and (e) people receiving invalidity benefit declared part-time earnings; what are the average weekly earnings declared; and what proportion such claimants represent of claimants in the group at the latest available date and in comparable periods since 1988.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the tables. Information is provided for 1989—the earliest year for which income support information is readily available—1990 and 1991, the latest years available.

Notes: All figures rounded to nearest thousand; percentages correct to one decimal place; average earnings correct to nearest penny.

"Lone parents" in the tables means people aged under 60 who are entitled to a lone parent premium and who do not receive a disability premium.
"Disabled" in the tables means people aged under 60 who are entitled to the disability premium.
There will be some overlap between groups (c), (d) and (e) in the tables.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the £15 earnings disregard for people who are receiving income support, either because they have a disability premium or are part of a long-term unemployed couple, applies to the earnings of each individual member of a two-person household; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Where a couple qualify for this disregard, the total amount of earnings that can be disregarded is £15 for the couple.

Sickness Benefit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of sickness benefit at the end of each month since April 1991.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table, and is obtained from a 100 per cent. count of cases by benefit offices at the end of each month, rounded to the nearest thousand. The figures include cases registered sick that are not receiving sickness benefit but are receiving income support and national insurance credits.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he proposes to take to equalise the treatment of men and women in receipt of invalidity benefit following the ruling of the European Court of Justice on 30 March.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 26 April 1993, at columns 311-12.

Pension Funds

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the commission chaired by Professor Goode, currently looking into pension funds, is expected to report; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason) on 30 March, at column 172.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the lost Maxwell pension funds has now been located; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand that the liquidators of Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd., which managed Maxwell pension scheme funds, have located and secured assets presently worth some £300 million. The Department's Maxwell pensions unit are continuing to assist where practicable with the liquidators' work.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will meet representatives of organisations of Maxwell pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: This month I have two meetings with hon. Members and representatives of Maxwell pensionsers. The Department's Maxwell pensions unit regularly meets the various Maxwell pensioners' action groups.

Appeals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals are presently outstanding at each Independent Tribunal Service office; and what additional resources have been provided to this service since April 1992.

Mr. Burt: The appeals outstanding at 31 March 1993 in each region of the Independent Tribunal Service and the disability tribunals central office are in the table. The budget for ITS for 1992-93 was £33·09 million. For 1993-94 the budget is £46·68 million. The additional resources of £13·59 million take account of increased caseloads for social security appeals tribunals, medical appeals tribunals, and disability appeals tribunals, and the establishment of child support appeal tribunals.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current waiting time for (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) disability living allowance from application for appeal application to appeal hearings.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. However, for the quarter ending 30 June 1992, the latest period for which figures are available, the average time taken from an appeal application to a final hearing was:

	Weeks
(a) Attendance allowance	26·7
(b) Mobility allowance	23·8
(c) Disability living allowance	17·9

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the names and contact addresses for all Independent Tribunal Service regional chairmen.

Mr. Burt: The information is as follows:

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretry of State for Defence what are the weather minima for low-flying training below 250 ft in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The weather minima for all military low flying training in the United Kingdom low flying system are as follows:

(a) All aircraft flying in the system faster than 140 kts must maintain 5 km visibility, 1500 m horizontal and 500 ft vertical separation from cloud.

(b) Aircraft, other than helicopters, flying at 140 kts or slower must maintain either 5 km visibility, 1500 m horizontal and 500 ft vertical separation from cloud or 2 km visibility, clear of cloud and in sight of the surface.

(c) Helicopters flying at 140 kts or slower must maintain either 5 km visibility, 1500 m horizontal and 500 ft vertical separation from cloud or keep clear of cloud and keep in sight of the surface.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretry of State for Defence how many movements into low-flying areas at less than 250 ft above ground level were authorised in each year since 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of movements authorised for flying below 250 ft in the three United Kingdom tactical areas each year since 1987 are as follows:

Year	Number
1988	2,115
1989	2,694
1990	6,027
1992	3,220

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the military low level training sorties flown over the United Kingdom in each year since 1987 included authorisation to fly at (a) 200 ft above ground and (b) 100 ft above ground level.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Figures for low-flying sorties that have been flown below 250 ft are not available. The proportion of low-flying training movements authorised for flying below 250 ft, for each year since 1987, is given in the table. Such flights may be authorised down to a minimum level of 100 ft but records do not distinguish between levels within the 250 ft to 100 ft band.

1988	0·69
1989	0·88
1990	1·92
1991	0·72
1992	1·15

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force fast jet pilots are currently qualified to fly at 100 ft above ground level.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not available.

Saudi Arabia (Arms Contract)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated final value of the Al-Yamamah arms contract with Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Aitken: Al-Yamamah is a continuing programme, with no specified end point, so it is not possible to estimate its final value. Purchases by the Saudi Arabian Government under the agreement are, of course, a matter for them.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which AWE sites are covered in his evidence to the Select Committee on Defence, in the answer on page 66 of HC 237 of Session 1989-90.

Mr. Aitken: The AWE sites are covered in evidence given to the Defence Select Committee in report HC 237 1989-90 were AWE Aldermaston, AWE Burghfield, AWE Cardiff and AWE Foulness.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom nuclear tests are scheduled to take place before September 1996.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 12 November 1992, Official Report, column 881.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Abducted Children

Mr. Olner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will seek a meeting with the Spanish ambassador regarding the position of British children abducted to Spain.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Spain is a signatory to both the Hague and European conventions on child abduction. Since central authorities remain in close contact with each other, there are no plans for such a meeting at this time.

EDUCATION

Student Loans

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to lay before the House revised student loans regulations, and if he will give details of the new loan rates for 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland have laid the Education (Student Loans) Regulations 1993 before Parliament today.

The loans regulations provide for the new higher rates of loan. For the academic year beginning in September 1993 the maximum rates of loan in the United Kingdom will be as follows:

Loan rates 1993-94	Full year rate (£)	Final year rate (£)
Students living away from parents home:
In London	940	685
Elsewhere	800	585
Students living at parents home	640	470

Apart from technical amendments, the one change to the loans scheme included in the regulations this year provides for students following two-year degree courses, and one accelerated three-year course, to claim the full-year rate of loan if their final year lasts for 40 weeks or more.

TRANSPORT

Road Improvements

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the measures which he has introduced and is intending to introduce to increase developer contributions to road improvements.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend published a consultation document last August following an efficiency scrutiny report on developers' contributions to highway works. This set out proposals to facilitate developments that otherwise may be postponed or prevented because of inadequate road capacity. The responses to the consultation document are still being examined. A further statement will be made once that examination has been concluded.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Official Report, column 401, if he will name the firm of consulting engineers appointed as the Government's agent.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: G. Maunsell and Partners.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the overall average period of service in one episode of employment;

(2) how many (a) men and (b) women work in (i) manufacturing industry and (ii) the retail trades; what percentage of the work force these figures represent; and what is the average length of time spent by each sex in each category of employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information available for both questions, from the labour force survey, is given in the tables:

Persons in employment by sex and industry, Autumn 1992 Great Britain (not seasonally adjusted)
Numbers of persons in employment (thousands)

	All industries	Manufacturing industry	Retail trade
Men	13,779	3,754	1,114
Women	11,188	1,462	1,699
All persons	24,967	5,217	2,813
As a proportion of all in employment (per cent.)
Men	55·2	15·0	4·5
Women	44·8	5·6	6·8
All persons	100·0	20·6	11·3
Average length of time in current employment (years)
Men	9	9	7
Women	6	7	5
All persons	8	9	6

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people were quarterly attenders in each month since January 1981; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 7 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about the number of unemployed people who were quarterly attenders in each month since January 1981. This is something which falls within the responsibilities she has delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, I am only able to provide the information you requested from April 1986 as data prior to that date can only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Careers Guidance Diploma

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 21 April, Official Report, column 130, on the careers guidance diploma, how many students are studying part-time; and what are the figures for Scotland.

Mr. McLoughlin: Further to my reply to the hon. Member of 21 April 1993, column 130, I have obtained from the local government management board the following information:

Number of students in United Kingdom currently studying part-time for Part 1 of the Diploma in Careers guidance, 90.

Of these, the number studying in Scotland, 5.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations she undertook prior to turning the post of chair of the Health and Safety Executive from a full-time position to a part-time one; and what impact she estimates this will have on the work of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: The decision to make the next chair of the Health and Safety Commission a part-time appointment reflects the loading of the post in current circumstances. Those circumstances include the strengthening of the senior management structure of the Health and Safety Executive last year, when a second full-time deputy director general was appointed to work with the existing full-time director general and deputy. The work of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive remains unchanged.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of job vacancies in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. McLoughlin: In March 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of unfilled vacancies in jobcentres covering the Greater Manchester area was 4,840. This figure has not been seasonally adjusted.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the importance and on the future role of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: The future role of the Health and Safety Executive will be to continue its good work in promoting health and safety in the workplace while ensuring businesses are not burdened with unnecessary bureaucracy.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Deficit Funding

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 April, Official Report, column 480, to what extent he is currently underfunding the deficit.

Mr. Nelson: The Government are pursuing their full fund policy, as set out in the "Financial and Budget Report 1993-94".

Central Bank Advances

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which other European Community Governments make use of advances from their central banks similar to the ways and means advances to Her Majesty's Government from the Bank of England.

Mr. Nelson: The public sector in most other European Community countries makes use of advances from its central bank. Details are given in the 1992 annual report of the committee of governors of the central banks of the member states of the European Economic Community. A copy of this document is available in the Library.

Ways and Means Advances

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 April, Official Report, columns 480-81 on ways and means advances, if he will give the actual advances from the Bank of England outstanding at the last working day of the last six financial years and the interest rate payable at that time on such advances.

Mr. Nelson: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Level of Ways and Means[1] advances outstanding from the Bank of England £ million	Interest[1] percentage
1987-88	4,638	8·375
1988-89	6,256	12·875
1989-90	5,963	14·875
1990-91	6,918	12·875
1991-92	7,187	10·375
[2]1992-93	3,062	5·875

[1] Level of Ways and Means, rounded to the nearest million, and interest payable as at the last working day of each financial year.
[2] (Provisional).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 April, Official Report, column 481, on ways and means advances, why interest is paid on such advances; and what proposals he has to arrange for the Bank of England not to charge such interest.

Mr. Nelson: Interest is payable to the Bank of England on ways and means advances, and payable by the Bank of England on deposits when the national loans fund is in surplus. It is appropriate for national loans fund borrowing from, and lending to, the Bank of England to be at interest.

There are no proposals to change the arrangements for charging interest.

Industrial and Provident Societies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will table a new statutory instrument to replace the Industrial and Provident Societies (Increase in Shareholding Limit) Order 1981 (SI, 1981, No. 395) in order to increase the current £10,000 limit on shareholdings in industrial and provident societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have no immediate plans to do so, although the Treasury keeps the limit on shareholdings in industrial and provident societies under review at all times.

Conditionally Exempt Property

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that, where the owner of conditionally exempt property is required to sell part of it under the provisions of the Housing and Urban Development Bill, there should be no review of the designation of the whole of the property.

Mr. Dorrell: Where there is a disposal of part of a property which is conditionally exempt from inheritance tax, the conditional exemption designation of the whole property is reviewed. If the disposal has not materially affected the heritage entity, the designation for the remainder remains in force and the inheritance tax charge is limited to the part disposal.

Following consideration of representations received, the Government propose that, where a part disposal results solely from leasehold enfranchisement under the Housing and Urban Development Bill, or the Leasehold Reform Act 1967, and there is no breach of undertakings in respect of the retained property, there should be no review of designation of the retained property. In these circumstances, the inheritance tax charge will be limited to the part disposal.

A new clause to the Finance (No. 2) Bill 1993 will be tabled shortly on this proposal.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Indonesia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the projects funded by the Overseas Development Association for Indonesia; to what extent Indonesia's human rights record has affected the level of aid that it receives; and what representations have been made to Indonesia on human rights matters.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are two main elements of ODA's aid programme for Indonesia—projects supported under the aid and trade provision, essentially through the concessional loan arrangements signed since 1986, and technical co-operation projects funded on a grant basis.

In the first group of projects currently at the implementation stage are the rehabilitation and upgrading of 140 km of rail line, a new 17 km rail spur, both in west Java, provision of Bailey-type steel bridging, a radio communication system for the Ministry of Forestry, airport security systems for the Medan and Bali international airports, a flight simulator for a domestic civilian airline, shortwave radio transmitters for the national broadcasting service, equipment and a training centre for universities in western Indonesia and diesel power units for central Sumatra.

Technical co-operation projects under implementation are in the sectors of natural resources, including particularly forestry, energy—both gas and power—education, public administration, and training.

ODA also supports the work of non-governmental organisations in Indonesia.

Decisions on the level of aid for Indonesia, as for all countries, are taken after consideration of all relevant factors, including human rights.

We frequently express to the Indonesian Government our continuing concern at human rights matters, both in Ministers' meetings with their Indonesian counterparts and in representations here and through the embassy in Jakarta. The most recent occasion was when my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary visited Indonesia in early April.

Family Planning (China)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information he has received from the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations Fund for Population Activities on the activities of the Chinese Family Planning Association and the Chinese State Family Planning Commission; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has held with the IPPF and UNFPA concerning coercive population control in China; and if he will make a statement;

(3) further to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 363, on the work of IPPF and UNFPA, what information his Department receives from these organisations between their annual conferences.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 4 May 1993]: The Overseas Development Administration receives various information from, and is in regular consultation with, IPPF and UNFPA about China's population programme and the technical and financial assistance they provide to China's Family Planning Association and State Family Planning Commission.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account he takes in making grants to the population control work of IPPF and UNFPA of Chinese state laws prescribing mandatory abortifacient contraception, sterilisation and abortion.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 4 May 1993]: ODA provides grants to IPPF and UNFPA in support of their worldwide activities. ODA, IPPF and UNFPA all believe that women and men should be able to choose whether to have, or not to have, children without any form of coercion.

The British Government attach importance to China adopting powerful directives from the centre to eliminate coercive practices and human rights violations in its population programme. IPPF and UNFPA endorse this view and are in regular dialogue with the Chinese Government.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Eritrea

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will announce Her Majesty's Government's policy on the recognition of Eritrea following its referendum result.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We warmly welcome the outcome of the referendum on Eritrea's status. United Nations observers have confirmed their satisfaction with the process. This opens the way for recognition of Eritrea.

The Eritreans have announced that their independence will be formally declared on 24 May. Accordingly, we plan to announce our decision on diplomatic recognition on that occasion.

Malawi

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made to Malawi about human rights in Malawi during the recent United Kingdom presidency of the EC.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: During our presidency, the EC made two demarches to the Malawian Government about human rights. On 4 August a demarche expressed concern at the re-arrest of Chakufwa Chihana following his earlier release on bail. On 20 October, a further demarche detailed EC member states' continued concerns over human rights and in particular called for greater police accountability and freedom of expression, both of which the EC consider to be prerequisites for the lifting of the restrictions on non-humanitarian aid to the country, imposed by donors in May 1992.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce the Government's proposals on Sunday trading in the next session of Parliament; and if he will present a Bill before Christmas 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We shall make available a draft Bill together with a text explaining the effects of its provisions before the summer recess. The Bill will be ready for introduction early next Session, when parliamentary time allows. Details of Bills for introduction in the next Session will be given in the Queen's Speech.

Motor Vehicle Offences

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) thefts of a motor vehicle and (b) thefts from a motor vehicle were committed in the Greater Manchester area in each year since 1987.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is published annually in table 3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Volume 3", copies of which are available in the Library.

Primates

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 October 1992, Official Report, column 372, if he is now able to provide information on the proportion of primates used in British research which are (a) wild caught, (b) captive bred outside the United Kingdom and (c) captive bred in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office scientific procedures inspectorate has, since the answer of 22 October 1992, completed a survey of the holding of larger primates in 1992. This indicated that the proportion of captive-bred larger primates held, though not necessarily used, is now 80 per cent.

The breakdown by species in 1992 was as follows:

Species	Number held	Number captive bred	Percentage captive bred
Cynomolgus	2,689	2,143	79·7
Rhesus	919	878	95·5
Stump/Pigtail	81	79	97·5
Others	6	6	100

It is not possible, from the information available, to distinguish between those animals which were captive-bred in the United Kingdom and those which were captive-bred elsewhere.

No precise information is available in respect of smaller primates, although it is believed that the great majority of those used will have been captive-bred in this country.

Replica Firearms

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes involving the use of replica firearms have been committed in each police authority area in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Figures for offences involving imitation firearms in England and Wales are set out in the table. These figures include replica firearms and all other types of imitation firearms, including toys.

Figures for Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in which imitation firearms were reported to have been used in England and Wales

War Crimes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent on war crimes investigations since enactment of the War Crimes Act 1991; and with what results.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Expenditure so far incurred under the War Crimes Act 1991 is estimated at £3·21 million. Investigations have been undertaken into over 350 allegations and inquiries are still continuing in 75 cases. As yet, no prosecutions have been started under the Act.

Crime Statistics

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out for each police authority in England for the most recent three years for which figures are available (a) the number of recorded crimes, (b) the ratio of recorded crimes to population, (c) the number of cleared up crimes and (d) the ratio of crimes cleared up to crimes committed; and if he will give the corresponding figures for 1978-79.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is supplied in the following tables. The number of crimes committed is not available, so the number of crimes recorded is used in the clear-up ratio.

Racist Organisations

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many proceedings have been taken against racist organisations or their members in each of the last six years.

Mr. Jack: Information recorded centrally only identifies the defendant by gender and "other"—public bodies, organisations, etcetera. The table shows the number of prosecutions under section 5A of the Public Order Act 1936 and part III of the Public Order Act 1986.

Passports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for each passport issuing office the current waiting times for processing applications for passports.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have asked the chief executive of the Passport Agency to reply and he will do so shortly. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Letter from J. E. Hayzelden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 5 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me, as chief executive of the Passport Agency, to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about processing times for passport applications. I have set out below the current processing times for straightforward, properly completed passport applications at each of our six offices. They are:

Passport Office	Working days
Belfast	6
Glasgow	8
Liverpool	13
London	8
Newport	10
Peterborough	7

Our current target is to process these applications within a maximum of 20 working days, while processing urgent applications in accordance with customers' travel needs.

Knife Attacks

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black youths and how many white youths died after a knife or other attack during the last five years in (a) south-east London, (b) the Metropolitan police district and (c) England, identifying where known if the killer or suspected assailant was (i) white and (ii) black.

Mr. Jack: This information is not available from the statistics collected centrally.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought by the police relating to animal welfare in 1991; and how many were successful.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 4 May 1993]: The information is given in the table:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hospital Beds

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) national health service hospital beds and (b) national health service private beds there were in each board area in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 30 April 1993]: Information detailing the number of available beds in each health and social services board since 1979 is shown in the table. Information on the number of health service private beds is not collected centrally.

	Eastern	Northern	Southern	Western
1979	8,728	2,454	2,662	3,280

1991-92	6,207	1,984	2,095	2,314

Over the same period, the number of patients treated has increased from: 241,264 in 1979 to 278,960 in 1991-92.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Executive Agencies

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what key targets have been set for his executive agencies for the current year.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am responsible for six executive agencies; Chessington Computer Centre, Central Office of Information, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Civil Service College, Civil Service Occupational Health Service and Recruitment and Assessment Services. I announced Chessington's targets for the current year when it was launched on 1 April 1993. For the others, I have set the following key targets for each agency for the current year.

Central Office of Information (1993-94)

(i) To achieve break-even in current cost terms after covering all costs;

(ii) To achieve a 1 per cent. reduction in unit cost of output in real terms while maintaining suitable levels of quality;

(iii) To deliver all work in accordance with client specification;

(iv) To deliver all work on time.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office (1993)

(i) To achieve a current cost operating profit of £8·0 million, before exceptional items.

(ii) For print procurement, to achieve 95 per cent. overall of orders delivered to time and 100 per cent. of vital orders on time. Also 100 per cent. of orders delivered without fault;

(iii) For publications, to achieve 95 per cent. overall of production jobs delivered to time and 100 per cent. of basic production jobs on time. Also 100 per cent. of production jobs delivered without fault; in addition, to dispatch 85 per cent. of publications orders within four working days of receipt and 95 per cent. within five working days;

(iv) For business supplies, to dispatch 99 per cent. of orders of stock catalogue items within four working days of receipt. For non-stock items to place 95 per cent. of orders with contractors within five working days of receipt by HMSO.

Civil Service College (1993-94)

(i) To break even in accrual accounting terms, taking into account the central payment from OPSS;

(ii) To earn £300,000 from consultancy work;

(iii) To attract 7,200 students at grade 7 or above and 2,400 students below grade 7 who are in development schemes;

(iv) To attract 2,120 students on courses for externally validated qualifications;

(v) To earn 80 per cent. of course evaluations in the two highest categories;

(vi) There is also a medium term objective of obtaining a 10 per cent. increase in efficiency over the period 1991-92 to 1995-96.

Civil Service Occupational Health Service (1993-94)

(i) To break even in accrual accounting terms;

(ii) To achieve a cost per productive professional day (including administrative and overhead costs) of £268 or less;

(iii) To achieve an average cost per case referral of £23·50 or less;

(iv) To turn round within 15 days, 90 per cent. of referrals where no additional information is sought and within 40 days 65 per cent. of case referrals where additional information is sought;

(v) To earn 85 per cent. of customer satisfaction marking in the top two boxes of the post-service questionnaire.

Recruitment and Assessment Services (1993-94)

(i) To keep any operating deficit on an accruals basis to £450,000 or less;

(ii) To achieve volumes of 475 consultancy days sold and 25 training courses organised;

(iii) To increase efficiency by 2·5 per cent. over 1992-93 outturn;

(iv) To improve the quality of service to customers and achieve 95 per cent. responses in the top three categories of the customer satisfaction questionnaires and, within this target, to achieve 75 per cent. of responses in the top two categories.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of British domestic tourists in each year used (a) hotels/guest houses/bed and breakfast, (b) self-catering, (c) holiday camp and (d) other accommodation.

Mr. Key: The available information is contained in the following table:

Domestic tourists in the United Kingdom: Percentage figures for type of accommodation used are shown below:

Type of accommodation used	1989[2] per cent	1990[2] per cent	1991[2] per cent
Hotels/motel/guest houses/ farmhouse/other private house/bed and breakfast[1]	27	27	24
Self-catering accommodation[3]	18	19	21
Holiday camp/village[1]	3	3	3
Other accommodation[4]	58	55	56

Source: United Kingdom Tourism Survey.

[1] The categories of accommodation listed in the table above are the ones employed by the United Kingdom Tourism Survey and in some instances are slightly different from those specified in the question.

[2] Each year's percentages sum to more than 100 per cent. for two reasons. Firstly, part of the "holiday camp/village" category is also included in the "self-catering accommodation" category. Secondly, on some trips tourists use more than one type of accommodation.

[3] Non-commercial accommodation is not included in the category "self-catering accommodation".

[4] Other accommodation includes staying with friends and relatives.

ENVIRONMENT

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his deregulatory review of existing controls on toxic and hazardous waste; and which bodies he is consulting as part of the review.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are considering regulations which will implement directive 91/689/EEC on hazardous waste and which will replace the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980. This will take account of deregulation, any views of the industry task forces and the need to avoid unnecessary controls.

The directive requires agreement on a list of hazardous waste. Successive drafts of the list prepared by the European Commission have been circulated for comment to a wide range of representative bodies. Consultation on revisions to the regulations is planned for later in the year.

Carbon Emissions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue discussion documents on the lines of his Department's publication "Climate Change: our National Programme for Carbon Dioxide Emissions" in relation to other greenhouse gases.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the increase in carbon emissions for every 1 per cent. decrease in the real cost of (a) gas and (b) electricity.

Mr. Maclean: Decreases in the real cost of energy will tend to increase demand and hence lead to increased carbon emissions. It is difficult to give a rule of thumb estimate of the effect, since the price elasticity of demand varies significantly between sectors and depends both on the absolute level of prices and the magnitude of any change. Changes in the price of any one fuel may also affect demand for others. And the impact on carbon emissions of a change in demand for electricity will depend on how the change in demand affects the balance of fuels used in generation.

As an illustration of the possible impact of energy price changes, the 17.5 per cent. increase in the price of energy to domestic sector users implied by the introduction of VAT is estimated to lead to a decrease in carbon emissions of approximately 1.5 million tonnes by the year 2000. An equivalent fall in energy prices to the domestic sector would have an approximately opposite effect.

Landfill Levy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce a landfill levy.

Mr. Maclean: We are currently considering the responses to the report by Coopers and Lybrand into "Landfill Costs and Prices: Correcting Possible Market Distortions", published in February 1993. To assist with this, we have also commissioned a study assessing the environmental impact of landfill against other waste management options and I expect this to be completed shortly.

Environment Conference, Lucerne

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on matters discussed and decisions taken at the second pan-European conference of Environment Ministers in Lucerne on 28 to 30 April; and what additional financial pledges were made by the United Kingdom to support decisions taken.

Mr. Maclean: The main subject discussed at the "Environment for Europe" conference in Lucerne from 28 to 30 April was the environmental action programme for central and eastern Europe. This sets out a broad strategy for tackling the most immediate environmental problems in central and eastern Europe, based on a "three-legged" approach of policy reform, institutional strengthening and investments. The conference firmly supported the implementation of this strategy. It also endorsed the establishment of mechanisms to implement the EAP, including a framework to facilitate the project preparation and investment process, and a task force to co-ordinate efforts to support institutional and policy change.

There was a progress report on the state of the environment in Europe report, which will serve as the basis of the further development of an environmental programme for Europe. The possible use of economic instruments was discussed, and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development was asked to explore further ways to facilitate a wider use of such instruments.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave the keynote address in the debate on monitoring, compliance and enforcement in environmental policy. Decisions in this area called for the extension of the OECD environmental performance reviews to Poland, Bulgaria and Belarus, for the work on integrated pollution prevention and control to be taken forward and for the elaboration of proposals to encourage public participation in environmental decision making.

It was agreed that the next conference should take place at the invitation of the Government of Bulgaria in 1995.

The follow-up work to the Lucerne conference and the preparation of the next conference will be co-ordinated within the UNECE framework.

This was not a pledging conference.

UN Commission on Sustainable Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals the United Kingdom intends to put forward to the first meeting of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development in New York in June.

Mr. Maclean: Our aim is to ensure that the commission plays an effective role in promoting sustainable development throughout the world following the Earth summit in Rio. I have placed the text of a joint Indo-British action plan for the first meeting of the commission in the Library of the House.

THORP

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out the terms of the BNFL licence application for the thermel oxide reprocessing plant; what specific substances, types and volumes of waste are proposed to be discharged, giving the respective levels and life of radioactivity; and how the different waste products will be dealt with;

(2) how the THORP licence, which has been applied for, differs from the existing licence in terms of the discharges it allows.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested by the hon. Member is contained in the public consultation documents issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 16 November last year, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Dail Eireann

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the meeting of 25 February in Dublin of an all-party group from Dail Eireann with officials from his Department.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 22 March 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the meeting on 25 February was between an all-party group of Members of the Dail Eireann and senior executives from British Nuclear Fuels plc who had been invited to answer questions on the company's activities.

WALES

TECs

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 187, if he will now give the budgets for each training and enterprise council in Wales and the amounts in each case for (a) youth training and (b) adult training for 1993-94; and what is the change in cash and percentage terms: from the budgets for 1992-93.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office is currently finalising contracts with TECs for 1993-94 budgets and the information is not yet available.

National House Building Council

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how often decisions made by the NHBC were re-examined by his Department in each year since 1980.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The NHBC has been approved as an approved inspector only since 11 November 1985. Under sections 16(10) and 39 of the Building Act 1984 my right hon. Friend deals with determinations and appeals, but has no powers to intervene in individual cases dealt with by the NHBC acting in its capacity as an approved inspector. An approved inspector must carry out its duties in accordance with the Building (Approved Inspector etc.) Regulations 1985.

Skin Diseases

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on his policy on skin diseases;

(2) what measures he will take to improve awareness of the problems encountered by persons with skin disease;

(3) if he will meet the National Eczema Society;

(4) what is the annual amount of financial aid he gives to organisations in Wales devoted to assisting those who suffer skin diseases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Treatment of skin diseases is a matter for practitioners and for health authorities within their obligations to maximise health gain. The subject of skin diseases will be included in further advice to guide local strategies for health, to be published shortly.

No direct grants are currently made to voluntary organisations specifically concerned with skin diseases. I am always prepared to consider requests for meetings from organisations such as the National Eczema Society.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultant dermatologists there are in each health district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information is given in the following table:

	Consultant Dermatologists in Posts[1]
Clwyd	1·8
East Dyfed	1·8
Gwent	2·0
Gwynedd	1·1
Mid Glamorgan	2·0
Pembrokeshire	0·2
Powys	0·1
South Glamorgan	3·0
West Glamorgan	1·8

[1] Whole-time equivalents of consultants in post as at 30 September 1991.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage of referrals for new hospital out-patients in 1991-92 which related to skin diseases.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information relates to referrals for new hospital out-patients in the specialty of dermatology. There were 29,522 such referrals in 1991-92, which represented 5·3 per cent. of all referrals.

Hearing Aid Clinics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hearing aid clinics there are in each county in Wales; if he will list their locations; where residents in Clwyd travel to obtain advice and assistance concerning hearing aids and hearing difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the numbers and location of hearing aid clinics is not available centrally. The level of provision and location of clinics is a matter for the local health authority.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to establish a clinic for the giving of advice concerning hearing aids on Deeside, Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the local health authority to consider.

European Farm Commissioners

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department was represented at the European Farm Commissioners meeting on 26 and 27 April.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes.

Suicides

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many suicides on farms have occurred in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the suicide rate amongst the working population in Wales by occupation in each of the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

IACS Forms

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received advocating an extension of the deadline for submitting completed integrated administration and control system forms.

Mr. David Hunt: Several.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will require local authorities in Wales to make maps available to farmers to assist in the completion of the integrated administration and control system forms before 15 May.

Mr. David Hunt: The ability which local authorities have to allow farmers access to maps is constrained by the facilities they have for public viewing and the terms of any copyright agreement related to the maps in their possession. Given the urgent need which farmers have to obtain the information required to complete their integrated administration and control system forms, I have agreed with the Ordnance Survey that local authorities and other organisations which hold maps may be allowed to make them available for viewing and, provided that they adopt the appropriate commercial arrangements pertaining to copyright agreements, for sale also. Many organisations, including local authorities, have responded positively to a request to offer this facility to farmers.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations his Department made to the European Commission concerning the deadline set for the submission of completed integrated administration and control system forms.

Mr. David Hunt: The deadline for the submission of applications has been set at 15 May in the governing EC regulation to allow sufficient time for field inspections to be undertaken to verify claims under the new arable aid and beef support regimes. At the Agriculture Council last week the Commission confirmed that the deadline cannot be extended.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Coal Investment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals in regard to investment in the coal industry were put forward by the United Kingdom at the European Industry Council of Ministers meeting on the European Coal and Steel Community meeting in Brussels on 4 May.

Mr. Eggar: No specific coal investment proposals were discussed at the European Industry Council of Ministers on 4 May.

Misleading Pricing

Mr. Moss: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the recommendations of the Monitoring Committee on Misleading Price Indications; and if he will publish their report.

Mr. Leigh: My noble Friend the Minister for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has considered the committee's recommendations. She has decided to continue to rely on the existing general provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 rather than introduce a package of regulations dealing with various types of price comparison as the committee recommended. She intends in due course to consult on proposed revisions to the code of practice for traders on price indications. She expects to go to public consultation in the near future on regulations on price indications when tickets for theatres and other public events are resold by agents. Since the committee has discharged its remit, she has decided to stand it down.

A copy of the committee's report will be placed in the Library.

UKCS

Mr. John Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much of the total exploration and appraisal expenditure on the United Kingdom continental shelf over the last three years was spent on (a) wells, (b) seismic, (c) overheads, (d) insurance and (e) other expenditure.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 May 1993]: The Department of Trade and Industry collects only aggregate data on UKCS exploration and appraisal expenditure. These were published, in April 1993, in appendix 12 of my Department's report to Parliament, the "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", the Brown Book, a copy of which is available in the Library. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of such expenditure into the categories requested using available data sources.

Chernobyl

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the latest information Her Majesty's Government have received from the Ukrainian, Russian and Belarus authorities in regard to the number of people who died as a result of the Chernobyl accident in April 1986.

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have received no information directly on this subject. The Department is aware of a scientific article by Ilyin et al entitled "Radiocontamination patterns and possible health consequences of the accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power station" published in the Journal of Radiological Protection 1990, Vol 10 No. 1, pp 3-29. In addition, a report published in 1990 by an international advisory committee, co-ordinated by the International Atomic Energy Agency, entitled "The international Chernobyl project: an overview", looked at the consequences of the accident. Copies of it are available in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Chiropody

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many chiropodists counted as full-time equivalent are employed by each health board; and how many are employed per 1,000 population.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is shown in the table. Due to the small number of staff employed, rates are shown per 100,000 population.

Health board chiropodists as at September 1992

	Whole-time equivalent	Rate per 100,000 population
Scotland	536·3	10·6
Argyll and Clyde	46·3	10·6
Ayrshire and Arran	59·6	16·0
Borders	13·7	13·2
Dumfries and Galloway	15·3	10·4
Fife	48·8	14·1
Forth Valley	26·8	9·9
Grampian	41·6	8·2
Greater Glasgow	89·3	9·8
Highland	17·0	8·3
Lanarkshire	52·7	9·5

Orkney	1·0	5·1
Shetland	4·0	18·0
Tayside	40·2	10·3
Western Isles	3·4	11·3
State Hospital	0·1	—

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current waiting time in each health board area for an appointment with a chiropodist.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not collected centrally.

Health Boards (Public Relations)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many senior posts in public relations existed in each health board immediately before any unit acquired trust status; and how many such posts exist in health trusts currently.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available centrally.

Arachnoiditis

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision is available within the national health service for sufferers from arachnoiditis.

Mr. Stewart: It is for health boards to negotiate contracts for the provision of services for arachnoiditis patients based on their assessment of need.

Child Psychotherapists

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase the number of child psychotherapists to work with vulnerable children and their families.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Psychotherapy represents one approach to treating vulnerable children and their families. It is for health boards and other statutory agencies to decide the number of child psychotherapists required to meet identified needs in their areas.

HEALTH

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the City of London police about the need for an accident and emergency department at St. Bartholomew's hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a letter from the Acting Assistant Commissioner of the City of London police. The letter has been passed on to the North East Thames regional health authority, which has responsibility for the consultations on the future of St. Bartholomew's accident and emergency department.

G. P. Fund Holders

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the guidelines issued to general practitioner fund holders on managing their budgets efficiently.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) on 14 April at column 608.

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the cost effectiveness of general practitioner fund holding.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Stockport (Ms Coffey) on 4 May at column 43.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met representatives of the Association of Directors of Social Services to discuss the provision of personal social services during the current financial year.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) on 4 May at column 40.

Anophthalmic Children

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 8 February to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms Lynne), Official Report, columns 478-79, when she expects the Moorfields study of children born anophthalmic or with very small eyes to be completed.

Mr. Sackville: I understand that the study is due to be completed later this summer.

Homeopathy

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the Royal College of Physicians regarding the status of homoeopathy.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is Her Majesty's Government's national strategy for the prevention of volatile substance and solvent abuse for 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government's strategy against drug misuse was set out in "Tackling Drug Misuse: A Summary of the Government's Strategy" and "UK Action on Drug Misuse—The Government's Strategy", copies of which are available in the Library. The Government will continue to take action to prevent volatile substance abuse in the context of that overall strategy. The prevention working group of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs is currently examining issues relating to volatile substance abuse and will make recommendations to Ministers in due course.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is Her Majesty's Government's financial commitment to volatile substance and solvent abuse prevention in 1993-94; and how much of this figure is represented by payments to voluntary organisations.

Dr. Mawhinney: Action to prevent volatile substance abuse is one element of a number of central Department programmes, including programmes of support for voluntary organisations. Expenditure on the volatile substance abuse prevention elements of these programmes cannot be separately identified. The national curriculum requires all maintained schools in England and Wales to provide some education about the misuse of drugs and other substances. Health and local authorities are responsible for assessing the needs of their resident population and for providing services to meet those needs, including services for the prevention of volatile substance abuse.

Natural Medicine

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to invite voluntary groups representing natural medicine to join the Wider Health Working Group.

Mr. Sackville: Because of the very wide range of organisations and interests concerned with health, it is not possible for membership of the wider health working group to reflect every aspect. The group is always ready to take into account issues raised by those who are not directly represented.

Abortions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued on the use of agency arrangements by district health authorities where they are unable to provide 75 per cent. of all local abortions.

Mr. Sackville: None. It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to decide how best to provide local health services.

Merged Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities have merged into larger units over the last five years; and if he will state for each merger the population of each merging authority and the population of the new unit, the number of public health doctors in each merging authority and the number of public health doctors in each new unit.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown arranged by region. Figures for population and numbers of public health doctors are bracketed in that order after each authority.

Figures for populations are the 1991 census-based provisional mid-1991 resident population estimates, except those districts marked [1] for which information was not collected in the 1991 estimates. In these cases, figures are based on the 1981 census-based mid-1990 resident population estimates.

Information on public health doctors refers to substantive appointments of directors of public health and consultants in public health medicine and is taken from the 30 September 1991 census. Figures are not yet available for the new authorities, except in the case of Bloomsbury and Islington.

Dentistry

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists who have not given notice to leave the dental list have given written notice to each FHSA to deregister some or all of their continuing care arrangements for adult patients in each week since 20 November 1992; how many dentists have deregistered patients; and how many patients have been deregistered.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 April 1993]: The information requested is given in the table. The information provided weekly by family health services authorities since July 1992 shows that in the period up to 23 April 1993, 1,842 dentists have given notification to deregister 437,352 adult patients.

In the period 1 July 1992 to 28 February 1993, the total number of adult patients registered with a dentist in England has increased by 0·648 million, 3·1 per cent. from 20·580 million to 21·228 million. This increase has occurred over a period during which dentists have deregistered 0·4 million patients and where over 2·4 million registrations have lapsed because the patient has not visited the dentist in the last two years.

Notes:

1. Dentists who first deregistered patients between week ending 3 July 1992 and week ending 20 November 1992 are not included in this table, even if they deregistered patients between 21 November 1992 and 23 April 1993 since each dentist is only counted once on the first occasion he deregistered a patient.
2. In the 32 FHSAs not included in this table, no dentist first deregistered a patient between 21 November 1992 and 23 April 1993.
3. A small number of FHSAs have submitted revised figures. These amendments have been included in the cumulative totals but not in the weekly totals. The sum of the weekly totals does not therefore equal the cumulative total.

Note:

[1] No patients have been deregistered in the 21 remaining FHSAs during this period.

[2] A small number of FHSAs have submitted revised figures. These amendments have been included in the cumulative totals but not in the weekly totals. The sum of the weekly totals does not therefore equal the cumulative total.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, North (Mr. Heald), Official Report, columns 268-70, if he will make a similar analysis for each quintile of pensioners' incomes for single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner units.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the tables.

[5] Mean.

Notes:

1. All figures before housing costs (BHC) unless otherwise stated. After Housing costs—AHC.
2. All average amounts are means except where otherwise stated.
3. Components may not sum to totals owing to rounding.
4. Pension units are defined as single people over state pension age and couples in which the husband is over state pension age.
5. Estimates of percentage growth are based on unrounded income figures and may not therefore be the same as those calculated from the rounded amounts shown in the table.
6. Estimates of growth in total net incomes by quintile are based on medians. Estimates of growth of components of income and total incomes of all pensioners are based on means.

Notes to tables 2-5:

(i) A pensioner unit is defined as a single pensioner aged above state pensionable age (SPA) or a pensioner couple where the husband is aged over SPA.

(ii) A recently retired pensioner unit is defined as a single pensioner aged less than five years above SPA or a pensioner couple where the husband is aged less than five years above SPA.

(iii) * denotes where low sample sizes make any estimate unreliable.

(iv)  denotes where percentage growth estimates are inappropriate.

(v) Where single quintile estimates are not reliable, due to low numbers of sample cases, an estimate is given for a number of combined quintiles

(vi) All amounts are given at 1989 prices.

(vii) Tables 1 and 3 are based on the separate income distributions for single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner units respectively. Tables 2 and 4 are based on separate income distributions for recently retired single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner units respectively.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional provision for annual recurring expenditure in his Department has been made following rulings of the European Court of Justice in each year since the implementation of the Single European Act.

Miss Widdecombe: Special provisions are made only on a case-by-case basis, for annual recurring expenditure as a result of cases referred to the European Court of Justice. None of these cases arose as a result of the Single European Act, which does not contain any specific measures relating to social security. Provision for expenditure since 1 July 1987 is in the table.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action the Government intend to take following the statement by the Under-Secretary of State in a letter dated 7 April to the hon. Member for Walsall, North that local authorities including Walsall were in breach of the law as regards the concessionary fares for those in receipt of the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: Walsall council has undertaken to ensure that its concessionary travel scheme complies with the law. We intend to remind all local authorities that, in accordance with section 73(14) of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, they must not refuse concessionary fares, or levy a contribution towards the cost of them, specificallly because a person receives the mobility component of disability living allowance.

Non-contributary Benefits

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the social security and other benefits available at national, county and local level, to which persons arriving in the United Kingdom are and are not entitled if they have not paid United Kingdom taxes or national insurance contributions.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits in Great Britain is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is responsible for the arrangements in Northern Ireland.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Terence Higgins, dated 7 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will list the Social Security and any other benefits available at national, county and local level, to which persons arriving in the United Kingdom are and are not entitled to if they have not paid United Kingdom taxes or National Insurance contributions.

I should point out that, although benefits may be administered locally they are national benefits. I enclose a copy of leaflet FB2 which lists all social security benefits which are available. Entitlement is dependent on a person's individual circumstances. Most Social Security benefits employ a residence or contribution test and so are not immediately available to those entering Great Britain. However, the usual entitlement conditions may be modified if the applicant has either come from an EC country and is able to take advantage of EC regulations concerning Social Security for migrant workers or has come from a country with which the United Kingdom has concluded a Reciprocal Social Security Agreement.

Income Support is an exception since it has to serve as a safety net. Entitlement depends on immigration status. All those people who have a right to live in the UK permanently, including those who have been granted refugee status, may receive benefit if they satisfy all other relevant conditions of entitlement. It would be inconsistent to allow people to make their home in this country and then deny them financial support in times of need.

People who are applying for refugee status, that is asylum seekers, are not entitled to benefits under the normal rules. However, decisions on refugee status are very complex and take a long time to determine. While these questions are being considered, such customers can receive Income Support at a reduced rate under the Urgent Cases Rules.

All Benefits Agency offices have comprehensive written guidance on how to deal with claims from people from abroad. Our procedures for processing such claims involve close liaison with the Home Office Immigration and Nationality Department.

I also understand that these people can claim Housing Benefit from their Local Authority subject to the normal rules but this may affect their right to stay in the country.

I hope this information is helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support there are (a) in total, (b) who are single parents, (c) who are signing on as unemployed, (d) who are disabled and (e) who are pensioners (i) at each of the Benefits Agency offices having customers in Derbyshire and (ii) who are resident in Derbyshire.

Mr. Burt: The administration of Income Support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mrs. Margaret Beckett, dated 7 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many claimants of Income Support there are (a) in total, (b) who are single parents, (c) who are signing on as unemployed, (d) who are disabled and (e) who are pensioners (i) at each of the Benefits Agency offices having customers in Derbyshire and (ii) who are resident in Derbyshire.

The complete range of information requested is not available except at a disproportionate cost. This is because information regarding the number of Income Support recipients who are either lone parents or disabled are not routinely collected, nor do we collect information on the basis of county of residence.

I have appended the latest available statistics relating to each of the Benefits Agency offices in Derbyshire. The figures relating to those customers who receive either a lone parent or a disability premium will not equate exactly to the number of lone parents or disabled people. This is because a single parent may be in receipt of a more advantageous premium, and a person in receipt of a disability premium may not necessarily be registered as disabled. You should also note that, for Income Support purposes, a pensioner is a person of either sex aged 60 or more.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Attorney General what guidelines the Crown Prosecution Service has on prosecutions in cases of domestic violence.

The Attorney-General [pursuant to his reply, 2 March, Official Report, c. 76]: The Crown Prosecution Service has updated its guidance to staff on the review and prosecution of domestic violence cases.

The service has provided a copy of its statement of prosecution policy on domestic violence to the Home Affairs Committee inquiry on domestic violence and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The service is distributing the policy statement to interested agencies.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 10 May 1993

PRIME MINISTER

Political Parties (Funding)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister whether the Government will introduce legislation whereby political parties represented in the House will have to declare all moneys received from overseas.

The Prime Minister: We have no plans to do so.

Friends of Bosnia

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the organisation Friends of Bosnia in Liverpool; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: So far as I am aware, none.

Bogus Marriages

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the number of undetected bogus marriages taking place in the United Kingdom; and if he will appoint a senior Cabinet Minister to co-ordiinate an investigation into the abuse of the marriage laws, the extent to which this is facilitating illegal overstaying, circumvention of the immigration laws and the acquisition of British citizenship; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No realistic estimate can be made of the number of undetected bogus marriages, but superintendent registrars are alert to the need to report to the Registrar General where they have reason to believe that a marriage has been arranged solely for the purpose of circumventing immigration controls. Where this also involved a lawful impediment to the marriage, the superintendent registrar would not proceed with the ceremony.

Where the Registrar General believes that a marriage is prima facie one of convenience, the facts are passed to the Home Office to take whatever action is necessary to enforce the immigration law.

These arrangements will be kept under review, but I doubt whether an investigation of the kind suggested would increase their effectiveness. I shall, however, draw to the attention of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health the information that my hon. Friend has sent me.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Service

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Employment Service annual performance agreement for 1993-94 will be published.

Mrs. Shephard: I have today placed copies of the Employment Service annual performance agreement for 1993-94 in the Library.

May Day

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations she has held with the representatives of diary and calendar printers about the proposed abolition of the May day bank holiday; what consideration was given to their views; if her proposed change in the date of the bank holiday will take place in 1994; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department published a consultation document on the May day bank holiday on 1 December. Responses to the consultation document were received from a wide range of organisations, including some from within the dairy and calendar industry.

An announcement on the future of the May day bank holiday will be made shortly.

Terms and Conditions of Employment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she will take to ensure that employees receive a written statement of terms and conditions of employment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, currently before Parliament, significantly enhances the statutory right to a written statement of main terms and conditions of employment, reducing from 13 weeks to two months the period within which it must be provided and extending entitlement to employees working between eight and 16 hours a week, who have hitherto had to complete five years continuous service in order to qualify.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she will bring forward to protect employees of under two years standing whose employers have not issued a written statement of terms and conditions of employment and persistently fail to provide one.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Employees who have not received a written statement to which they are entitled under the provisions of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 may refer the matter to an industrial tribunal.

Clause 28 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, currently before Parliament, introduces a new provision making it automatically unfair for an employer to dismiss an employee, regardless of length of service or hours of work, for having sought in good faith to exercise a statutory employment protection right, including the right to a written statement.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish the numbers and percentages of her staff in grades one to five who each have (a) arts degrees, (b) science degrees, (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants, (e) have post-graduate qualifications in management and (f) who were educated in (i) local authority and (ii) private schools.

Mr. McLoughlin: The percentage of staff who have degrees are listed in the following table:

Grade 1—total staff in post = 1
No degrees held

Grade 2—total staff in post = 3
100 per cent. of Grade 2s have a degree in science
33 per cent of Grade 2s have a degree in arts

Grade 3—total staff in post = 17
35 per cent. of Grade 3s have a degree in science
24 per cent. of Grade 3s have a degree in arts
5 per cent. of Grade 3s have a qualification in management

Grade 4—total staff in post = 8
50 per cent. of Grade 4s have a degree in science
25 per cent. of Grade 4s have a degree in arts
37 per cent. of Grade 4s have a qualification in management

Grade 5—total staff in post = 89
29 per cent. of Grade 5s have a degree in science
22 per cent. of Grade 5s have a degree in arts
10 per cent. of Grade 5s have a qualification in management
1 per cent. of Grade 5s are qualified accountants.

Laboratory Technicians

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many grades of laboratory technician are registered in the United Kingdom; and how many are designated as medical laboratory scientific officers.

Mr. McLoughlin: No information of this kind is held by the Employment Department.

Oil and Gas

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of people employed in (a) onshore and (b) offshore oil and gas related activity in (i) 1991 and (ii) 1992; and what is her estimate of the total at the latest available date.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no separate figures for onshore and offshore oil and gas related activity.

The available information is as follows:

Employees in employment: Great Britain

	February 1991	February 1992	February 1993
Extraction of mineral oil and natural gas	[1] 50,000	n/a	n/a
Mineral oil processing	18,000	17,000	16,000
Public gas supply	78,000	78,000	75,000

[1] The latest estimate available is taken from the September 1991 census of employment.

Working Hours

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the average number of hours per week worked by people in full-time employment inclusive of any overtime.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates from the Labour Force Survey show that in autumn 1992 (September—November), people in full-time employment worked on average 45 hours per week including overtime (not seasonally adjusted).

Small Business Support Schemes

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what studies her Department has undertaken of the effectiveness of small business support schemes delivered by training and enterprise councils; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department currently has responsibility for the business start-up scheme (BSUS), (formerly enterprise allowance), which assists unemployed people to set up a business. The following studies have been carried out on the effectiveness of BSUS since training and enterprise councils (TECs) took over responsibility for its delivery:

"Enterprise Allowance Scheme: Evaluation of Development Projects", PIEDA, 1992.

"Enterprise Allowance/Business Start Up: A Survey of TEC Schemes", IFF Research Ltd., 1992.

The Department regularly carries out evaluation of all its major programmes, including the BSUS, and will continue to do so.

A number of other small business support measures run by TECs are now the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for each travel-to-work area and jobcentre area in Scotland the absolute change in the numbers of unemployed claimants between February and March and, for the same period, the numbers of claimants, (i) obtaining paid employments, (ii) entering into Government training schemes, (iii) being transferred to other benefits, (iv) being removed from the claimant count for reasons other than entering employment, (v) failing the actively seeking work test and (vi) having benefit disqualified.

Mr. McLoughlin: Statistical information is not routinely collected on the reasons why people cease to claim unemployment related benefits.

Figures on the net monthly changes in total claimant unemployment and the flows in and out of claimant unemployment for each parliamentary constituency, local authority area, travel-to-work area, and jobcentre area in Scotland can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

31. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has held with Civil Service unions concerning the impact of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on the policy of market testing civil service jobs.

Mr. Waldegrave: My ministerial colleagues and I have meetings with the civil service unions from time to time to discuss the range of Government policies.

38. Mr. Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether his Department will issue up-to-date figures for savings achieved by market testing of Government services.

Mr. Waldegrave: In previous years, savings arising from market testing have typically been around 25 per cent. of the original cost even where the activity has remained in-house. Savings from the programme for the period ending on 30 September 1993 are not yet available. When they are, I am sure that they will show significant savings in costs and improvements in quality, such as reliability and timeliness.

Citizens Charters

37. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the workings of the citizens charters.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Since my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 25 November 1992 the citizens charter has brought about further significant achievements. These include three new and one revised charter, the announcement of a complaints adjudicator for the Inland Revenue, and the launch of the second charter mark scheme. We shall publish a further White Paper in due course to record achievements across all public services.

Public Servants (Freemasons)

39. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to require declarations of interest by public servants who are freemasons.

Mr. Robert Jackson: As I said in reply to the hon. Member on 29 March at col. 14, an amendment to the civil service code is to be published shortly. The amendment will remind civil servants that freemasonry is among the possible sources of conflicts of interest which should be reported if and when they occur. A copy of the amendment will be placed in the Library of the House when published.

Hall I'th Wood Museum, Bolton

40. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to visit Hall I'th Wood Museum, Bolton, to discuss measures to increase awareness of science amongst the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my hon. Friend knows, I visited his constituency on 30 March this year. I am very happy to discuss with him measures to increase the public understanding of science.

Science White Paper

41. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he has undertaken on his proposed White Paper on science.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have consulted working scientists and industry, professional bodies, research charities and many others in order to prepare for the forthcoming White Paper on science and technology. I have published over 250 of the written submissions I have received.

Fourth Framework Programme

42. Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how he will secure the maximum opportunity for United Kingdom interests within the fourth framework programme.

Mr. Jackson: United Kingdom research teams take an active part in EC programmes, and in negotiating the fourth framework programme we shall aim to ensure that it reflects United Kingdom research needs. We shall also advertise the opportunities to carry out research under EC programmes as widely as possible throughout the United Kingdom science and technology community.

Small Firms

43. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Government intend to introduce a citizens charter for small firms.

Mr. Jackson: No. When service providers publish a charter they should set out standards of service to meet the needs of all the various users. Of course these include small firms, to which the Government attach great importance.

Research Councils

Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the research councils have now issued their corporate plans 1993.

Mr. Jackson: All five of the research councils have issued their corporate plans 1993.

Charters (Compensation)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total amount of compensation the state paid out on all charters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The total amount of compensation paid out by organisations which have charters is set out as follows:

	Cost (rounded to nearest £000)	From	To
BR passengers charter	1,000·0	May 1992	May 1993
London Underground Limited customers charter	41·0	August 1992	January 1993
Benefits Agency customer charter	1,058·0	April 1992	September 1992
Jobseekers charter	89·0	April 1992	March 1993
Contributions Agency employers and contributors charters	63·0	April 1992	March 1993
Northern Ireland Railways passengers charter	0·4	November 1992	April 1993
Travellers charter	9·0	January 1992	March 1993
Total	2,260·4

In addition to this, in the financial year 1992-93 the Inland Revenue paid £389,000 in compensations for

"serious error" as defined in the code of practice "Mistakes by the Inland Revenue". Customs and Excise has paid £315,000 in ex-gratia payments.

Office of Science and Technology

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide figures for expenditure for the Office of Science and Technology for (a) technology transfer and (b) industrial innovation (i) for the past five years and (ii) as projected for the next three years.

Mr. Jackson: The table lists the expenditure by the Office of Science and Technology for the "technology transfer" component of the primary purpose classification of research and development, as defined in the 1992 edition of the Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development. Information is not available under the heading "industrial innovation" as there is, as yet, no accepted standard definition of the term. The table lists the Office's expenditure under the primary purpose category "technology support", which includes strategic and applied research and pre-competitive schemes such as LINK.

Year	Technology transfer £ million	Technology support £ million
1988-89	4·9	[1]—
1989-90	4·0	209·0
1990-91	4·6	238·0
1991-92	6·1	243·9
1992-93	6·8	289·6
1993-94	8·7	326·9
1994-95	8·9	347·2
1995-96	9·1	358·1

[1] Note: The primary purpose classifications were changed between 1988-89 and 1989-90 with the introduction of a new class "technology support", but did not affect "technology transfer".

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BNFL Contracts

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial safeguards exist to protect British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. in its contracts with Scottish Nuclear and Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for the companies involved.

Nuclear Reprocessing Contracts

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the role of his Department in the Nuclear Electric/Scottish Nuclear/BNFL discussions about re-processing contracts at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Eggar: The negotiations are a commercial matter for the companies involved.

Civil Aviation Research

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish his Department's report, drawn up by its aviation committee, into future DTI funding for civil aviation research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 4 May 1993, Official Report, column 5.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how long his Department has been in possession of its aviation committee's report into future DTI funding for civil aircraft research; and what action he has taken in light of its conclusions.

Mr. Heseltine: The national strategic technology acquisition plan for aeronautics was formally presented to my Department on 4 November 1992; the committee's proposals are being considered.

Betws Colliery

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he intends to allow the running of Betws colliery to be taken over by the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal is committed to offering to the private sector pits which it no longer wishes to operate, including Betws. The Government welcome this commitment.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent inquiries there have been from the private sector into the possibility of taking over the running of Betws colliery: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I have recently had a number of discussions with representatives of the private mining sector about a range of matters.

British Coal is, of course, committed to offering to the private sector pits which it no longer wishes to operate and is keen to begin this process as rapidly as possible.

Developmental Staff

Mr. Garrett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 5 who have (a) arts degrees, (b) science degrees, (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants and (e) have postgraduate qualifications in management.

Mr. Eggar: Of the 328 people in grades 1 to 5 who are on the permanent staff of the Department of Trade and Industry, 176 (54 per cent.) have arts degrees, 86 (26 per cent.) have science degrees and 21 (6 per cent.) have technical degrees. There are 10 qualified accountants and 10 whose records indicate postgraduate qualifications in management.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Darling: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many exploration and appointed oil and gas wells were drilled in the United Kingdom continental shelf fin 1992; and what is his estimate of the number to be drilled in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995.

Mr. Eggar: Seventy two explorations and 57 appraisal wells were drilled in 1992. My Department does not publish forecasts for the number of wells. It does, however, conduct regular surveys of company plans for drilling wells looking up to two years ahead. The results of the last survey were published in the August 1992 issues of "Energy Trends", a copy of which is in the Library.

Companies House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place a copy in the Library of the information letter on the stage 2 privatisation options exercise circulated to all members of the staff of Companies house in the last week of April; what date he has set for the completion of the stage 2 exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have placed in the Library a copy of the notice to staff requested by the hon. Member. The consultants have been asked to complete their report by the end of July.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the state of the British leather goods manufacturing industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 6 may 1993]: The leather goods manufacturing industry (Standard Industrial Classification Group 442) had total United Kingdom sales of £213 million in 1991. Employment, in 1990, of 10,800 is concentrated largely in small units, three quarters of which have fewer 10 employees and none over a 100. International trade is significant: imports account for some 77 per cent of United Kingdom consumption and the United Kingdom industry exports 54 per cent. of its output. An ecouraging feature is that since 1986 exports have been growing more rapadily than imports—13 per cent. per annum and 8 per cent per annum respective respectively.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those next steps agencies within his responsibility that he plans to privatise.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 22 April 1993]: The prospects for privatising the agencies in my Department are kept continually under review. Since it was established in 1990 as an executive agency the National Engineering Laboratory has been working towards full commercial viability with a view to privatisation: it continues to work towards that objective. I announced a specific review of Companies House in July 1992, which is continuing. I have just announced a study on the long term future of the DTI laboratories: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 4 May 1993, Official Report, column 4.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Population Programmes

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions for 1993 are being made to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the United Nations Population Fund and the World Health Organisation human reproduction programme.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows:

	£ million
IPPF	[1]7·5
UNFPA	[1]7·0
WHO/HRP	3·0

[1] Core grant. Additional contributions for specific programme activities will also be made.

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures the Government have taken to ensure that funding to the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations Population Fund is not used in coercive population control measures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: IPPF and UNFPA, like Her Majesty's Government, are firmly opposed to any population activities in which there is any element of coercion of individuals to practise family planning, or to accept any particular type of contraception. Their population programmes fully accord with the human rights principles set out in the world population plan of action.

We examine annually with other donor Governments IPPF and UNFPA policies and programmes at the IPPF donors meeting and UNFPA Governing Council respectively. We are also in regular consultation with IPPF and UNFPA about their population activities.

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the total United Kingdom bilateral disbursements on population activities and to which countries for each of the years 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Total aid programme disbursements on population activities amounted to some £26·5 million in 1991 and £28 million in 1992, of which £7·2 million and £6·1 million respectively represented bilateral disbursements. This bilateral assistance was distributed as follows:

	1991 £	1992 £
Ethiopia	37,249	8,159
Ghana	469,000	771,918
Kenya	606,829	1,812,248

Tree Planting

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking in response to the evaluation carried out at the request of the Overseas Development Administration of four tree-planting projects funded by British aid in Lesotho, Kenya, Ivory Coast and southern India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: These projects, started during the 1970s and early 1980s, were completed between 1987 and 1991. The evaluations were undertaken after their conclusion in order better to assess their overall impact. The lessons drawn from them have been carefully noted, both by Overseas Development Administration staff responsible for similar projects including any follow-on work in the four countries, and by the Commonwealth Development Corporation which co-financed the Côte d'Ivoire project. We are preparing formal written guidance, based on the findings and lessons of these and other forestry evaluations, for use in identifying, appraising, implementing and monitoring forestry projects.

Eritrea

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all current United Kingdom assistance to aid development projects in Eritrea and the cost in each case.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: Past British aid to Eritrea has been included in the British aid programme to Ethiopia. This includes grants to NGOs working in Ethiopia and Eritrea, expected to total around £1 million in 1993-94. We recently made a contribution of over £250,000 towards the United Nations verification mission to the Eritrean referendum, including four observers and supporting equipment.

We have been discussing with the Eritrean authorities a separate development aid programme for 1993-94, for which £500,000 has been allocated. This will include 17 United Kingdom training awards, costing £187,000; other elements will be agreed in the coming months.

Angola

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the levels of humanitarian aid to the civilian population of Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 30 April 1993]: The return to civil war in Angola has made it very difficult to assess need and deliver aid to the civilian population of Angola. We have provided some humanitarian relief already and are keen to do more where we are confident that it will reach its intended beneficiaries. We are monitoring the situation closely with international agencies and non-governmental organisations.

SCOTLAND

War Crimes

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Crown Office has yet received a report about the Gecas case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the normal practice of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate to disclose the names of individuals who may be under investigation or to comment on the stage that any particular inquiries may have reached.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the total cost incurred in respect of war crime investigations in Scotland in each of the last five years;

(2) how many prosecutions in respect of war crimes are being contemplated in respect of Scotland for the current year;

(3) how many people in Scotland (a) have been investigated over the last five years and (b) are currently being investigated in respect of alleged war crimes committed during the second world war.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total cost incurred in respect of war crimes investigations in Scotland in 1991-92 was £267,520. For 1992-93 the latest available figures show that the cost was £352,966. Costs did not arise before those financial years.

It has never been the practice of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate or his predecessors to disclose, at the stage of investigations and before investigations are complete, whether or not prosecutions are being contemplated. In the course of the investigations conducted over the past two years allegations against 17 named individuals have been, or are being, considered and investigated in Scotland.

Local Government

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the public Acts of Parliament passed since the general election of 1979 which have affected the duties, powers and responsibilities of local government in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 4 May 1993]: The list gives the most readily identifiable Acts passed since the general election of 1979 which are extant and affect the duties, powers and responsibilities of local government in Scotland.

Cancer Screening

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women were screened for breast and cervical cancer in each year since 1987 within (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board area, (b) the Greater Glasgow health board area and (c) Scotland as a whole; if he will estimate in each case the percentage of women in the age range from 20 to 60 years who availed themselves of these tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 6 May 1993]: The information requested is currently being compiled and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Medical Staff

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many consultant medical oncologists, radiotherapists and general surgeons are employed on (a) a full-time basis and (b) a part-time basis in each of the health boards.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 May 1993]: The numbers of consultants in the specialties of medical oncology, radiotherapy and general surgery employed on a full-time basis and a part-time basis at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which information is available, are given in the following annex.

Cancer

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the seven most common malignant neoplasms amongst NHS patients; and what were the number of deaths brought about by each in the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 May 1993]: The table gives the number of registrations of the seven most common cancers in men and women in Scotland in the period 1987-91 and the number of deaths from these forms of cancer in the same five-year period.

Numbers of registrations and deaths from the seven most common malignant neoplasms, by sex, Scotland 1987-91

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet Mr. Rauf Denktash, the leader of the Turkish Republic of North Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations are being made to Cyprus for Asil Nadir to be brought back to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have an extradition treaty with the Republic of Cyprus, but the writ of the lawful Government does not run in the north of the island.

Immediately after Nadir's abscondment, our high commissioner in Nicosia met Turkish Cypriot leader Mr. Denktash on 5 May to demand that Nadir be handed over to the British authorities.

On 7 May I summoned the Turkish ambassador to explain the anger felt in this country, and ask for Turkish assistance in ensuring Nadir's return.

The Turkish Cypriots should appreciate the damage it could do to their interests if they were to acquire a reputation as a refuge for fugitives from justice.

Libya

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom citizens are (a) currently serving sentences and (b) awaiting sentencing in Libyan prisons.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no British citizens serving sentences or awaiting sentences in Libyan prisons.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades one to five who each have (a) arts degrees, (b) science degrees, (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants, (e) have post-graduate qualifications in management and (f) who were educated in (i) local authority and (ii) private schools.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall write to the hon. Member with details as soon as they are available.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his response to the Libyan/Russian proposal at the United Nations for an international tribunal under United Nations auspices to try the two Libyans accused of the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not aware of any such proposal.

Unpaid Parking Fines

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish figures recording the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by diplomatic missions in London during 1992.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payments.

The total of 4,166 represents a 19 per cent. reduction from the same period in 1991 when 5,145 fines were incurred. This compares favourably with the same period in 1984 when almost 108,932 fines were recorded. We welcome this further reduction in unpaid parking fines and appreciate the cooperation of diplomatic missions and international organisations since the introduction of the parking policy. We shall continue to monitor carefully the level of unpaid fines and pressure diplomatic missions to reduce this still further.

Diplomatic Immunity

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were alleged to have been committed in 1992 by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity; and how many foreign diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in that year as a result of alleged offences.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Thirty-three alleged serious offences by persons entitled to diplomatic immunity were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1992, as against 40 the previous year. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the report to the Foreign Affairs Committee, "The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges (1985)" as offences falling into a category which would in certain circumstances attract a maximum penalty of six months or more imprisonment. The majority involved drinking and driving and shoplifting.

Eight diplomats were withdrawn from their posts in Britain in 1992 following alleged offences, as against seven the previous year.

Overseas Trade Assistance

Mr. Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans he has to increase the assistance available overseas to businesses seeking to increase trade in other countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: In consultation with the DTI (as our partners in Overseas Trade Services) we are constantly seeking ways to enhance the export services we offer to British industry.

EDUCATION

"How is Your Child Doing at School?"

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the total number of telephone calls and written requests for "How is Your Child Doing at School?"; and how many were distributed in each of the 10 languages listed in the advertisement on 27 April.

Mr. Forth: Responses to the first part of this campaign are still being compiled. My right hon. Friend will announce these in due course.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to announce his decision following the consultations on the common funding formula for grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We are currently considering the responses to the first consultation paper on the common funding formula (CFF). In the light of that consideration we intend to issue a second consultation paper early in the summer as a further move towards the introduction of the CFF in a small number of pilot areas from April 1994.

NERIS Database

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total public expenditure on the NERIS service; what circumstances have led to it being wound up; what implications there are for the delivery of the national curriculum; what action he is taking to salvage the NERIS database; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: From 1985-86—the first year of investment—to date, the total Government investment in NERIS from my Department and three others was £5 million. The purpose of this was to develop the database service to a position in which NERIS would be fully self-sufficient, serving schools and colleges across the United Kingdom. It failed to do that and the number of subscriptions declined substantially last year to a figure of only some 2,200. It was therefore decided that no further public investment could be justified. The NERIS Trust is currently considering winding-up procedures.

Disabled People

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what measures he intends to take to encourage people with disabilities to become teachers, nursery nurses or teachers' aides.

Mr. Boswell: The Department is in consultation with disabled teachers' interest groups prior to the revision of the Department's circular 1/88 "Physical and Mental Fitness to Teach of Teachers and of Entrants to Teacher Training". This will continue to stress that disability in itself does not mean a person is medically unfit to teach, but that the paramount consideration should be the health and welfare of pupils. Applicants need to take into account that employment in these areas can also make significant demands on an individual's strength and stamina.

Special Schools (Tests)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what recent representations he has received from the National Association for Special Educational Needs regarding the implementation of the standard assessment tests for seven-year-olds in special schools.

Mr. Forth: There is no record of my right hon. Friend having received any representations in recent months from the National Association for Special Educational Needs on testing.

We believe that children with special educational needs should follow the national curriculum and participate in its associated assessment arrangements wherever possible, so that they have access to the same education as other pupils. The School Examinations and Assessment Council has given guidance to schools about ways in which the tests for both seven and 14-year-olds might be modified or adapted for pupils with special needs, without compromising the results they yield, so that as wide a range of pupils as possible can benefit from them.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) of 30 April Official Report, column 555, if he will give the corresponding information on surplus school places for Cleveland.

Mr. Forth: On the basis of the survey of school capacity carried out by the Department we estimate that in Cleveland in 1991 there were some 11,181 primary and 10,676 secondary surplus places, representing, respectively, 17 per cent. and 23 per cent. of total capacity.

Tests (Advertising)

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will provide a breakdown of the £750,000 her Department recently spent on advertising the Government's view on the testing of school children.

Mr. Forth: The campaign is providing information to parents about this summer's tests. It involves the production, printing and distribution of the leaflet "How is Your Child Doing at School?". The leaflet has been distributed to schools and its availability advertised in the national press. The total cost of the campaign has been estimated at £750,000 although the final cost will depend on the number of requests for further leaflets.

Nursery Schools

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each Greater London borough, the percentages of children under five years old currently registered as attending local authority funded nursery schools; and if he will list for each of the boroughs what percentage of under fives attended maintained nursery schools in 1986, 1988, 1990 and 1992.

Mr. Forth: Participation rates for January 1992—the latest date for which information is available—are shown in the table. Because of recent revisions to the population estimates to take account of the provisional results of the 1991 national census of population, information is not available on a comprehensive basis for earlier years at individual authority level.

Estimated percentage of the local three- and four-year-old population attending maintained nursery schools in each education authority in the Greater London region.

WALES

Badger Setts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his answer of 31 March, Official Report, column 270, what advice has been obtained before granting a licence to allow dogs to be entered into a badger sett; what criteria have been applied to determine whether, when and to whom such a licence should be granted; what measures have been taken to ensure that the minimum harm possible is suffered by dog and badger; and what are the conditions attached to the granting of any such licence.

Mr. David Hunt: Any licence application to permit the entry of dogs into badger setts would be judged on its merits, taking account of advice from wildlife experts from the Agricultural Development Advisory Service following a site visit. Conditions attached to a particular licence will reflect the circumstances of the case.

Local Government, Gower

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit West Cross in the Gower constituency to discuss factors affecting local government matters.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no present plans to do so.

Employment Projects

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 May, Official Report, column 24, if he will specify the number of projects in each county corresponding to the jobs (a) created, (b) safeguarded and (c) the capital expenditure as arising from inward investment in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: The county by county breakdown of inward investment projects recorded for Wales during 1992-93 is shown in the following table. The figures are based on information provided by the companies at the time the projects were recorded and have not been amended to take account of any subsequent development.

Health Service

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to fund-holding general practitioners in respect of payment for patients referred to treatment centres for ophthalmic, general or orthopaedic surgery.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the guidance on treatment centres sent to all general practitioners and general practitioner fund holders, fund holders are eligible for a share of the centrally allocated places available to their district health authority. The cost of treatment for these places is funded centrally by the Welsh Office and there is no charge to general practitioner fund holders. In addition, health authorities and fund holders are free to make contracts with the centres for treatments over and above those funded by the Welsh Office.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Local Tax Offices

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the closure of the Inland Revenue offices in Sittingbourne, Kent; what will be the cost of providing the service elsewhere, including location costs; and what is the financial saving on a year to year basis.

Mr. Dorrell: Ten representations expressing concern at the planned closure of the tax office in Sittingbourne, Kent have been received. The costs of providing the service elsewhere and the financial savings cannot be separately identified since the closure of the Sittingbourne office is a part of a larger reorganisation involving offices in Maidstone, Kent.

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many local tax offices have been closed, or are planned to be closed, in 1992-93 and 1993-94, or any convenient period for which he has information; and what are the estimated savings arising nationally.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue is engaged in a long-term programme to restructure its 766 local offices in order to improve taxpayer services, operational effectiveness, and cost efficiency. By March 1994, 15 reorganisation schemes involving 71 existing offices will have taken place. Of these, 61 offices will cease to exist in their present form. The work carried out in those offices together with part of the work in 10 other offices will have been transferred to 31 newly created Revenue offices. Savings arising from the rationalisation of local office accommodation in these 15 schemes are expected to be of the order of £1·25 million a year in 1993-94 prices.

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the Inland Revenue takes into account the provisions of the citizens charter when contemplating the closure of local tax offices, with particular regard to the question of customer access for advice and help from officials.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue is fully committed to achieving further improvements in taxpayer service, operational effectiveness and in cost efficiency. In locations where tax offices may be closed, the Department is investigating alternative ways of meeting taxpayers' needs. These objectives are in line with those of the citizens charter.

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what process of consultation is followed when the Inland Revenue plan the closure of a local tax office; and what account is taken of representations from accountants, local companies and individual taxpayers.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue has begun a long-term programme to restructure its local offices in order to improve taxpayer service, operational effectiveness, and cost efficiency. The results of major surveys to establish taxpayer and employer needs are informing this programme. Representations from accountants, companies, and taxpayers are considered, but it is not normally possible to carry out detailed advance consultation. Discussions with staff take place on the implications for them of a closure, and the arrangements necessary.

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the policy of the Inland Revenue in respect of providing local offices at which taxpayers may have their affairs dealt with and may raise queries personally with the official dealing with their case.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue has begun a long-term programme to restructure its local offices in order to improve taxpayer service, operational effectiveness and cost efficiency. The results of major surveys to establish taxpayer and employer needs are informing this programme. In some locations offices may be closed but where that happens the Department is investigating alternative ways of meeting taxpayers' needs.

Industrial Building Allowance Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the total tax receipts forgone in each enterprise zone arising from industrial building allowance trusts that have been approved.

Mr. Dorrell: I regret that the information is not available.

Tax Deduction Certificates

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 248, if he will list those representations received last year concerning the free provision of tax deduction certificates by banks.

Mr. Dorrell: It is not our practice to publish representations of this nature, but the number we have received is quite small.

VAT (Education)

Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what forecast he has made of the revenue which would be raised by introducing a definition of education in schedule 6 to the Value Added Tax Act 1983 that excluded (a) music, (b) flower arranging and (c) domestic science, taught at adult education classes throughout the United Kingdom, from exemption;

(2) what revenue he would expect to raise by applying a definition of "education" in schedule 6 to the Value Added Tax Act 1983 that excluded adult residential colleges from exemption.

Sir John Cope: No estimates have been made of the likely revenue effects.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance he has given to Customs and Excise in defining the terms and the scope of their investigations into the interpretation of the 6th VAT directive (77/388/EEC) with respect to education.

Sir John Cope: None. Customs and Excise is undertaking an internal review of the VAT exemptions available for educational services provided by fee-paying schools, universities and other businesses to see whether, within the constraints of EC agreements there is scope for simplification and rationalisation, and will report their conclusions to Ministers in due course.

Inheritance Tax Exemptions

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, columns 380-81, when the computerised register of objects granted conditional exemption from inheritance tax will be available for inspection.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue has now completed the computerisation of the register of conditionally exempt works of art (often known as the "V&A list"). The new computerised register includes a search and retrieval facility which will enable an inquirer to identify, more easily, objects of particular interest and obtain a detailed printout.

From today the computerised register can be consulted at the Victoria and Albert Museum (London), National Library of Scotland (Edinburgh), National Museum of Wales (Cardiff) and Ulster Museum (Belfast). Copies of the register in computer-readable format may also be purchased from the capital taxes office of the Inland Revenue for £10.

The computerisation of this register and the other measures which I announced last year will make it easier for the public to enjoy the benefits of conditionally exempt property which Parliament intended.

Charities

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on charities of the changes to the rate of advanced corporation tax announced in the Budget.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 7 May 1993]: It is estimated that the tax credits payable to charities on dividends paid by United Kingdom companies will eventually be reduced by about £50 million a year. Under the Budget proposals for transitional payments to charities to ease the change to the new rate of tax credit, the cost will rise progressively to this level over the period 1993-94 to 1998-99. In 1993-94 the cost to charities is expected to be about £5 million, on the assumption that about half of tax credits are claimed in the same year in which the dividend is paid. Details of the forecast transitional payments are given in paragraph 5.10 of the 1993-94 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Processing

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to legislate to ensure that meat processing companies have to label meat according to where the meat originated, rather than where it was transformed into other products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We have no plans to do so.

Rules on food labelling are harmonised at European Community level and already specifically require the place of origin to be given on food if its omission could mislead the consumer. Where a United Kingdom name is applied to imported products, then the place of origin is required to be given unless the product has undergone processing or treatment in the United Kingdom resulting in a substantial change. I consider that the present rules, together with the Government's initiatives to encourage retailers to provide this information where appropriate, provide sufficient information to enable consumers to make informed choices about the foods they buy.

Chernobyl

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken to help farmers still affected by the radioactive fall-out from the Chernobyl explosion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Help to farmers who are still subject to post-Chernobyl sheep restrictions centres on "mark and release" arrangements, which enable essential controls to be applied with minimal disruption to normal farming practices, and compensation payments which mitigate any adverse economic effects.

In addition, we continue to pursue our scientific monitoring and research efforts which are designed to identify areas for early derestriction and to enable potential technical remedies to be evaluated.

IACS Forms

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the deadlines set for the return of completed integrated administration and control system forms in (a) Greece, (b) Luxembourg, (c) Italy and (d) for livestock farmers in Ireland.

Mr. Curry: The deadline for IACS applications is 15 May in Greece, Luxembourg and Italy. The deadline is 14 May in Ireland, but farmers with permanent pasture only may submit the IACS application with their first livestock aid application after 14 May but not later than 1 July.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received advocating an extension to the deadline for submitting completed integrated administration and control system forms.

Mr. Curry: We have received a significant number of representations pressing for an extension of the 15 May deadline. As we have previously made clear, however, the Commission have no proposals for an amendment to the EC Council regulation which lays down this date.

Comfrey

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the action group for the relief of pain and distress was consulted specifically about the toxicity of comfrey prior to the announcement of the decision to ban the sale of comfrey products.

Mr. Soames: My hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) announced in March 1991 a full review of the safety and use of certain herbal substances, including comfrey. These substances had been removed from sale as medicines, for safety reasons, but could still be purchased as foods. A number of representations have been made in the years since that review was publicly announced. Comfrey was the first of these substances reviewed and the COT advice, together with that of the Food Advisory Committee, formed the basis for the action taken. That advice was unequivocal and there was no subsequent consultation prior to my announcement of 2 March 1993 of the voluntary withdrawal of certain comfrey products.

Sea Defences, Beesands

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of the 50,000 tonnes of granite boulders which were brought in from Sweden and France as part of the sea defence scheme at Beesands, South Hams, Devon; and if the contract for the boulders was made available to British companies.

Mr. Curry: The supply, delivery and placement of granite boulders was part of a larger contract awarded by the National Rivers Authority for the construction of the Beesands sea defences. Because of the narrow lanes in the area concerned, it was a condition of the contract that most of the rock should be delivered by sea. Eight British companies submitted tenders to the National Rivers Authority, including Costains Civil Engineering Ltd., who were awarded the contract. As yet itemised final accounts are not available to the Ministry but the estimated cost of supplying, delivering and placing the boulders is £0·8 million out of a total scheme cost of some £1·8 million.

Farmers' Earnings

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he measures the cash earnings of farmers.

Mr. Curry: Farmers' earnings may include income from both the farm business and other sources. Income from the farm is measured from sample surveys of the farm business and these also provide some information on non-farm incomes. Latest results from these surveys and the various definitions employed are published in Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1991-92.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

News Reporting (Restrictions)

13. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to review the laws which impose restrictions on news reporting.

Mr. Key: I am not aware of any statutory restrictions on news reporting which do not bear equally on other forms of publication. Editors and journalists are subject to the law in the same way as any other individual.

Listed Buildings

14. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to review the operation of listed building procedures.

Mr. Key: These procedures are under continuous review.

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about the care of listed historic buildings.

Mr. Brooke: This is primarily a matter for their owners. Local authorities have powers to take action where a building's preservation is in danger.

Cricket

15. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what support has been given to women's cricket through the Sports Council.

Mr. Key: The Sports Council of Great Britain's grant aid to the Women's Cricket Association in 1992-93 was a total of £45,000. The Sports Council has also worked closely with the association to help it improve its future programmes and policies.

18. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to promote cricket in schools and adequate provision for the funding of such a programme.

Mr. Brooke: The Sports Council is providing £130,000 per year for 1992-93 and 1993-94 to enable the National Cricket Association to employ 10 part-time regional cricket development officers, one of whose tasks is to promote links between schools and local cricket clubs. The council also gives £16,000 a year to the English Schools Cricket Association. In addition, three awards totalling £117,000 have already been made by our new Sportsmatch scheme to projects which will benefit youth cricket.

Responsibility for national curriculum physical education rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education.

Tourism

17. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to encourage local initiatives to increase tourism in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Government, through the English tourist board, has supported many local tourism initiatives in recent years, such as the one currently under way in my hon. Friend's constituency. The recent review of Government tourism policy concluded that domestic tourism funding should increasingly be targeted on specific local areas.

BBC Enterprises

19. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the status and powers of BBC Enterprises.

Mr. Brooke: BBC Enterprises Limited is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the BBC, which has holdings in a number of other limited companies.

Water-based Recreation (Safety)

20. Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to meet the Association of District Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss their role in the promotion and discussion of safety issues in connection with water-based recreation.

Mr. Brooke: I am happy to consider any any request for such a meting.

Visitor Bed Nights

21. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the latest figures on visitor bed nights in (a) England and (b) Dorset.

Mr. Key: The latest available figures for visitor nights in Dorset and in England are from 1991:

	million
England	449·3
Dorset	18·8

1991 was a generally disappointing year for the domestic tourism industry, largely because of exceptional factors such as the Gulf war. Full figures for 1992 are not yet available, but it is already clear that there was a significant recovery in the numbers of visitors, particularly those from overseas.

Windsor Castle

22. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much money has been raised from the public towards the restoration of Windsor castle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that there is currently £25,000 in the independent trust fund established by Coutts and Company, Bankers.

Hall I'th Wood Museum, Bolton

23. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to visit Hall I'th Wood museum, Bolton, to discuss the promotion of museums dealing with the nation's industrial heritage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I have no plans to visit Hall I'th Wood museum, though I am aware of its importance as part of our heritage; 1993 is Industrial Heritage Year, and I am aware that many museums in the region with important collections will be participating in the associated promotional activities.

Creche Facilities (London)

24. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what survey he has carried out of the extent of creche facilities at the major London tourist attractions.

Mr. Key: I have carried out no such survey.

Goidelic and Brythonic Languages

25. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to encourage the continuing use of place names that have their origins in the Goidelic and Brythonic families of languages.

Mr. Key: None; this is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Media Ownership

26. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his policy towards cross-ownership of the media.

Mr. Brooke: To keep under review the ownership arrangements made under the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1990.

English Heritage (London)

27. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what response his Department has made to the plans of English Heritage for London.

Mr. Brooke: I refer to the reply that I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 23 April at columns 228-29.

Press Regulation

28. Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he plans to make a further announcement on his policy in respect of the law on privacy of controls on the press; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on his policy on the future of the regulation of the press.

Mr. Key: The Government will set out their views on press self-regulation in their response to the report of the National Heritage Select Committee on Privacy and Media Intrusion. The opportunity will be taken to report progress on those recommendations of Sir David Calcutt relating to the protection of privacy which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State indicated in his statement to the House on 14 January that the Government accepted.

Treasure Trove

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what legislation he is proposing in relation to treasure trove.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend met the promoters of a proposed private Member's Bill earlier this year and indicated that in his view further consultations are needed, both within Government and beyond, before acceptable proposals for the reform of treasure trove legislation can be formulated. We have offered to assist with these consultations as soon as resources permit.

Public Libraries

Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has for the preservation and improvement of public libraries.

Mr. Key: Following extensive consultation, I have drawn up the terms of reference for a fundamental review to assess the scope and value of public library services currently provided by local authorities in England and Wales; to draw up guidelines and a framework for local choice for what should constitute a "comprehensive and efficient service" provided by a modern public library system; to consider the desirability of any changes in the requirements of the Public Library and Museum Act 1964; and to identify key developments requiring national attention.

St. Ethelburga's Church

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what provision is being made by Her Majesty's Government to assist in the repair and restoration of St. Ethelburga's church, damaged by the Bishopsgate bomb of 24 April, including the restitution of the interior murals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: English Heritage is providing direct practical assistance in assessing the damage and advising the Church authorities on possible options. It is for the latter to make proposals for the treatment of the building and to consider how any work might be financed. The special arrangements made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade with the insurance industry last year to ensure the continued availability of insurance cover against terrorist damage are also relevant to cases of this kind.

DEFENCE

Empty Properties, Plymouth

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much it is costing to provide security surveillance on the empty houses belonging to his Department in the vicinity of Mantle gardens, Barne Barton, Plymouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The security surveillance was arranged as a result of competitive tender and costs are commercial-in-confidence.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Security

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of whether the liaison and co-operation between the security service, special branch and the various police forces is working to the maximum efficiency.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am satisfied that these arrangements are working effectively.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that when warnings are given as to an imminent security threat the maximum information is given to the relevant police area.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am satisfied that the current arrangements for disseminating information of this kind to the police, and within police forces, are working properly.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make sufficient funds available to the City of London police to establish road blocks as and when required;

(2) what plans he has to increase funding of anti-terrorism operations (a) in general and (b) by the City of London police.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for the police authority to determine the level of funding for its police force. This then attracts specific grant of 51 per cent. from my Department in the normal way. Chief officers decide how to allocate the resources which are available to them. Whether and when road checks should be mounted under the powers available to the police is an operational decision for the chief officer.

At a recent meeting with the Lord Mayor and the commissioner of the City of London police I informed them that I would consider sympathetically any application I received from them for additional police officer posts or for capital spending on closed-circuit television in the city.

Royal Commission on Criminal Justice

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Royal Commission on criminal justice to report.

Mr. Jack: We understand that the commission hopes to publish its report before the end of June.

Terrorism

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for the future publication of statistics on the prevention of terrorism legislation in Great Britain.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department will continue to publish annually statistics on the operation of Prevention of Terrorism legislation in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin. The most recent publication, on 25 February 1993, included information for the whole of 1992. The next publication, due in February 1994, will contain statistics for the whole of 1993, including information about individual quarters during the year.

Separate publication of quarterly figures will cease immediately. In 1979 the then Home Secretary undertook to publish quarterly bulletins following Lord Shackleton's 1978 review of the Prevention of Terrorism Acts. The picture was then very different: In 1979 more than 850 people were detained in Great Britain and 48 extension orders were made. In 1992 the figures were 160 and 17 respectively. I have, therefore, decided that separate publication of quarterly figures is no longer justified.

No other bulletins on criminal statistics appear so frequently. Apart from the cost of producing the quarterly bulletins, there are sound statistical reasons for not publishing so often. The quarterly figures are unstable and there is considerable variation from quarter to quarter. It is therefore misleading to deduce trends based on the most recent quarter's data alone. Publication of all four quarters' data together, however, helps to put any variations in context. In previous quarterly statistical bulletins, the figures have had to be revised for annual publication, in the light of new information received. By ceasing quarterly publication, the figures will be more reliable on first presentation.

Prisoners (Mental Illness)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons within the prison system in the last year for which figures are available received care in long-term mental facilities within (a) one year, (b) two years and (c) three years of offending.

Mr. Jack: In 1992 the Secretary of State authorised the transfer of 611 mentally disordered prisoners to hospital under sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983 for appropriate medical treatment. The information held centrally does not show what periods of time these prisoners had spent in custody before transfer to hospital, nor how long they remained in hospital after being transferred.

Grants

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each category of grant available from his Department to (a) local authorities, (b) voluntary organisations, (c) commercial organisations, (d) other organisations and (e) individuals in each of the past five years, the current year and projected for the 1994-95 financial year together with, for each year and in each case, (i) the date he published information or issued a circular providing detailed criteria (ii) the date the application form was made generally available (iii) the published closing date for applications (iv) any extended and final application date applied by his Department (v) the date of announcement of his decisions and (vi) the date in which detailed offers were sent out by his Department.

Mr. Jack: Excluding payments made under contract, financial provision is available in 1993-94 for grants to be made in connection with the following programmes:

Local authorities
Police services
Probation services
Emergency planning
Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966
Safer Cities
Drug prevention
Probation and bail hostels

Voluntary organisations
Safer cities
Crime concern
Diversion from custody

Grants have been made in comparable categories over the past five years as well as in connection with:

BBC
Welsh Fourth Channel Authority	Responsibility transferred to the Department of National Heritage in 1992-93
Broadcasting Complaints Commission
Broadcasting Standards Council
Football Licensing Authority
Equal Opportunities Commission	Responsibility transferred to the Employment Department in 1992-93

BBC
Warning and monitoring Arson prevention	Up to 1992-93

Budgets for 1994-95 have not yet been settled.

The criteria and information required before grants are approved are made available to applicant organisations in a variety of ways. The detailed information sought is not available centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Electoral Fraud

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about how many votes were lost to their lawful recipients through electoral fraud in total in 1992; what percentage of these were due to misuse of proxy votes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of voting offences is not collected centrally.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans the Government have to review the format of the absent voter forms to prevent fraud by misappropriation of proxy votes; and what systems are in place to monitor the number of people claiming proxy votes in elections; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many voters by constituency voted by proxy in each of the last three general elections; and in each case what percentage difference this represented from 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the number of proxy voters is not collected centrally. Changes to absent voting applications forms are being considered by a working group of electoral registration officers and Home Office officials as part of our post-election review.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to increase the penalties for electoral fraud where the offence involves the deprivation of the vote to an elector who by reason of age, disability, language difficulties or other reason is particularly vulnerable to such fraud.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Penalties for election offences are set out in the Representation of the People Acts 1983 and 1985. We have no plans for any change.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to investigate possible electoral fraud regarding proxy votes in Brighton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the electoral registration officer in Brighton has investigated a number of complaints relating to proxy voting applications. One case was referred to the police who have decided that there was no evidence of any fraud.

Mr. Leon Patterson

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Greater Manchester police force concerning the death of Leon Patterson in custody in Stockport police station; and if he will make a statement on the action to be taken against the individual officers concerned.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for the chief constable of Greater Manchester.

Identity Cards

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has for (a) the cost of and (b) the time scale necessary for introducing a national identity card.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 6 May 1993]: In 1989 it was estimated that the cost (excluding initial capital costs) of issuing identity cards to all British citizens aged 12 or over could be around £350 million; and that the annual running costs of the system would probably be between £50 million and £100 million. The time scale necessary for introducing a card has not been estimated.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions (Payment Methods)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what meetings he has held, and what plans he has for meetings, with representatives of sub-postmasters to discuss his plan to encourage the payment of pensions into bank or building society accounts, rather than at post offices.

Mr. Burt: We have had no meetings with representatives of sub-postmasters but would consider any request for such a meeting.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of people receiving unemployment benefit in each month since May 1991.

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the form requested. The total number of people receiving unemployment benefit at quarterly dates from May 1991 to November 1992 is in the table.

Date	Numbers
9 May 1991	555,300
8 August 1991	608,400
14 November 1991	626,400
13 February 1992	694,700
14 May 1992	668,700
13 August 1992	642,300
12 November 1992	654,400

Residential Homes

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to introduce regulations to extend the period for which residential allowance may remain in payment to people who are absent from residential care and nursing homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: On 2 April we announced that the rules affecting payment of residential allowance (RA) would be changed to extend the period for which the allowance may remain in payment to such people from six days to six weeks, where the person enters hospital, and three weeks for other absences.

The regulations, introducing this change are being laid today.

The main provisions are:

The amending regulations will apply to people who may already have been absent for more than six days and for whom RA has already stopped. For such people RA will be reinstated from the date the amendment comes into force and will continue in payment for a period up to six or three weeks (as appropriate) from that date. The necessary procedure are already in hand to identify such cases.

A resident may be absent for up to six weeks in hospital and/or up to three weeks elsewhere (eg six weeks in hospital and three weeks with relatives) before returning to the home. Different periods in hospital separated by 28 days or less will be treated as being one continuous period.

The new provisions will apply to permanent residents who have left the home temporarily.

Maternity Payments

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the future levels of maternity payments to women earning less than the national insurance threshold.

Miss Widdecombe: Women whose earnings are below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions do not qualify for maternity benefits. Without such a floor on entitlement, benefit payments could exceed earnings. The limit itself is regularly increased, but we have no plans to remove it.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the levels of community care grants as a proportion of total social security expenditure for each year since 1988.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the table.

Year	Expenditure on social security benefits £ million	Expenditure on community care grants £ million	Expenditure on community care grants as a proportion of benefit expenditure Per cent.
1988-89	47,332	40	0·08
1989-90	50,100	59	0·12
1990-91	56,236	67	0·12
1991-92	65,336	79	0·12

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of letters received from hon. Members he has referred to the chief executive of the Benefits Agency in the last 12 months.

Miss Widdecombe: Between 1 April 1992 and 31 March 1993 a total of 14,316 letters were received from hon. Members. Of these, 2,770—19 per cent.—were referred to Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 5 who have (a) arts degrees, (b) science degrees, (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants and (e) have post-graduate qualifications in management.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disability Allowances

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for disability working allowance have been successful; how many have been unsuccessful; and how many are pending.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the Library.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will change the criteria by which claimants are eligible for disability working allowance so that take-up of the benefit can be improved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Further measures to encourage take-up were launched in April, including advertisements in the local press, mailings to advisers, and seminars for voluntary organisations. We have no plans to change the eligibility criteria.

Income Support (Under-25s)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what policy considerations underlie the difference in income support for those aged 18 to 25 years and those over 25 years.

Miss Widdecombe: The levels of benefit for those aged 18 to 24 take account of the fact that a large majority of this group do not have the responsibility for running their own household; the lower rates also reflect the lower earnings expectations of this age group generally.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support recipients are aged between 18 and 24 years; and how many receive the reduced £34·80 rate.

Miss Widdecombe: There are 810,000 recipients of income support aged 18 to 24. Of these, 520,000 receive the rate appropriate to a single claimant.

Source: Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry, May 1991.

Notes:

1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest ten thousand.
2. The number of recipients at the given rate has been estimated. The actual rate for 1991 does not correspond to the rate mentioned in the question.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which living expenses the income support personal allowance (a) of £34·80 and (b) for those aged over 25 years is intended to provide.

Miss Widdecombe: Income support rates are intended to cover all normal day to day living expenses. They do not include separate amounts for specific items of expenditure.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support in each Benefits Agency office having customers in Derbyshire, have arrangements for (a) direct payment of housing costs, (b) attachment of community charge, (c) direct repayments to the social fund, (d) direct payments to the electricity companies and (e) direct payments to British Gas; and what are the total amounts of (a) to (e) for customers who are residents of Derbyshire.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of Income Support and the Social Fund are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mrs. Margaret Beckett, dated 7 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking how many claimants of Income Support in each Benefits Agency office having customers in Derbyshire, have arrangements for (a) direct payment of housing costs, (b) attachment of community charge, (c) direct re-payments to the Social fund, (d) direct payments to the electricity companies and (e) direct payments to British Gas; and what are the total counts of (a) to (e) for customers who are residents of Derbyshire?

The complete range of information is not available except at a disproportionate cost. This is because statistics are not routinely collected to reflect the area of residence of customers with deductions. Statistics will shortly be available giving the numbers of benefit recipients whose mortgage interest is paid directly to their mortgage lender and I will be pleased to write to you further with this information when it is available. Statistics relating to Social Fund are only available on a District Office basis. These statistics show the number of loan applications for which a repayment was made during March 1993 and do not necessarily equate to the number of applicants. All the other figures show the position as at 28 February 1993.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the official report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Boarder Allowances

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from organisations and individuals in support of implementing a boarder premium for homeless families living in temporary accommodation; and what plans he has to meet the London Homelessness Forum.

Mr. Burt: We receive representations on many aspects of social security, including a number about the benefit arrangements for people living in temporary accommodation. I shall be meeting the London Homelessness Forum on 13 May 1993.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many boarder claimants received the eating out allowance in 1988-89; and what was the annual cost.

Miss Widdecombe: No data are available on either cost or the number of boarders who received an additional allowance for meals.

Judicial Review

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been made in the past year for judicial review of social fund decisions, and what percentage were successful.

Mr. Scott: Pursuant to my reply of 14 April 1993 at column 668 the following information was incorrect:

"In 1992-93, five judicial review applications were made. So far, two of these have been heard: neither was successful.

There have been 12·5 million applications for discretionary social fund payments since they became available in 1988: of these, only 25 have resulted in judicial review applications."

The correct information is as follows:

"In 1992-93 six judicial review applications were made. So far, two of these have been heard: neither was successful.

There have been over 12·5 million applications for discretionary social fund payments since they became available in 1988: of these, only 26 have resulted in judicial review applications."

Benefits (Automatic Credit Transfer)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimates have been made about the amount of money which could be saved from the introduction of automatic credit transfer of benefit payments into claimants' bank accounts;

(2) how many persons in receipt of social security benefits do not have a bank account.

Miss Widdecombe: The payment of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 7 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many persons in receipt of social security benefits do not have bank accounts and what estimates have been made about the amount of money which could be saved from the introduction of automated credit transfer of benefit payments into claimants' bank accounts.

A survey undertaken in 1991 estimated that 30 per cent. of Social Security recipients did not have a bank or building society account.

Payment by automated credit transfer (ACT) has been available to many of our customers for several years. In line with a commitment made in the Citizens Charter, ACT is being made available for a wider range of benefits. The savings resulting from this extension will depend how many recipients select ACT as a method of payment. If all social security recipients were paid in this manner, this would lead to administrative savings of around £475m a year.

I hope you will find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

British Council Initiatives

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what initiatives have been taken by the British Council to raise the profile of Northern Ireland abroad.

Mr. Hanley: Since 1986 the British Council, with financial support from the Department of Education for Northern Ireland, has operated an annual programme of cultural events, study hours and exhibitions designed to raise the profile of Northern Ireland in the United States. In 1992-93, this was complemented by a similar programme in Europe.

Obscene Items

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of items seized on the grounds of obscenity by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mates: The question of whether an item is obscene is a matter for the courts. Police records indicate that, during the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993, a total of 690 pornographic tapes were seized by the RUC. Other pornographic items, such as magazines, may have been seized by police at local level but no central record is maintained of such seizures.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been lodged with the Office of Fair Employment and industrial tribunals alleging sex or religious discrimination by each of the area health and social services boards in Northern Ireland; and how many, and for what reason, have not proceeded to a hearing by the tribunal over the last three years.

Mr. Hanley: The requested information is given in the following table:

ENVIRONMENT

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for PA Cambridge Economic Consultants to publish an interim report on the costs and benefits of enterprise zones before the publication of its final evaluation exercise report in 1995.

Mr. Robin Squire: An interim report has been commissioned and a final draft is being considered by my Department. No decision on publication has yet been made.

Recycling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publish a planning guidance note on the recycling of aggregate materials.

Mr. Baldry: The potential for increasing the use of waste and recycled materials as aggregates is a factor considered in the consultation draft of Minerals Planning Guidance Note 6 ("Guidelines for Provision of Aggregates in England and Wales"). Final guidance should be published in the summer. At present, I have no plans to issue separate guidance on recycling for aggregates.

Acidic Aerosols

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take immediate steps to monitor and control acidic aerosols.

Mr. Maclean: Measurements of aerosol sulphate are made at 10 sites in the United Kingdom. We have no immediate plans to extend this monitoring to acid aerosols.

Public Bodies

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Official Report, column 426, if he will list the public bodies to which he makes appointments and the number of people appointed to each.

Mr. Howard: The bodies, and the number of appointments, are as listed. Sixty-one of these posts are currently unfilled.

Council Tax

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses/dwellings are there in each council tax band in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency; and how many people in each council tax band qualify for the 25 per cent. single person's discount.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information for Chelmsford parliamentary constituency is not available. However, comparable information for the area of Chelmsford district council is available, as follows:

Council tax band	Number of dwellings	Number of single person discounts
A	3,980	2,430
B	7,890	4,150
C	19,110	5,210
D	14,510	2,770

Notes:
Totals may not sum owing to rounding. The figures for numbers of dwellings reflect the valuation list sent to Chelmsford district council as at 1 December 1992. Estimates for the number of single person discounts are derived from the number of dwellings shown on the community charge register at 1 December 1992 as containing only one non-student chargepayer on 1 June 1992.

Fanfare for a New World Concert

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the circumstances which led to the staging of the Fanfare for a New World concert in Liverpool in 1992; on what basis a £2 shell company was appointed to oversee the event; what creditors are now seeking satisfaction from the Merseyside development corporation; and what representations he has received about the matter.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Fanfare for a New World concert was an important element in the Grand Regatta Columbus celebrations held in Liverpool last summer. From the earliest stages of planning the grand regatta, it had been recognised that a major flagship event of this kind would help to attract visitors and media attention to the city.

The Merseyside development corporation took the decisions to act as sponsors, rather than organisers, of the concert following approaches made to them by a private sector consortium. This consortium, who had worked for them in various capacities since 1986, included a well-known London-based opera impresario and the organiser of the successful Symphony for A Spire at Salisbury Cathedral. In the light of the proven track record of the members of this consortium, and following a thorough appraisal of the proposed budget, a legal agreement was drawn up which, among other things, set a maximum level of sponsorship for the event. This maximum level was increased shortly before the concert when the corporation was advised that further sponsorship from the private sector had not been secured at the expected level.

I understand that the Merseyside development corporation has received no direct approaches from creditors. Apart from the hon. Member's question, the only representations that my right hon. and learned Friend has received are three further questions tabled by, and a letter from, the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle).

Council Tax

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the average number of days it takes his Department to respond to a written request from an hon. Member or a member of the general public for copies of his Department's explanatory booklets on the council tax; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what performance target he has set for his Department to respond to written requests from hon. Members and members of the general public for copies of his Department's explanatory booklets on the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 7 May 1993]: The average number of days it takes my Department's contractor to respond to a written request from an hon. Member or a member of the general public is currently about 10 working days. This period allows for inward and outbound postal transit times.

The performance target for response, be it to an hon. Member or a member of the public, is that a request be fulfilled as quickly as reasonably possible, while seeking value for money.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Old Palace Yard

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee when the agreement for use by the House of Commons of Old Palace Yard expires.

Mr. Ray Powell: New accommodation to house the present occupants of 6-7 Old Palace Yard will become available from the end of October 1993 onwards. It is planned that this House will have vacated the building by March 1994.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee whether English Heritage was consulted about the works to be carried out at 7 Old Palace Yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell: This is no longer a matter for this House. It is now one for the other place.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the numbers and percentages of his staff in grades 1 to 5 who have (a) arts degrees, (b) science degrees, (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants and (e) have post-graduate qualifications in management.

Mr. Norris: The information readily available from our manual staff records is as follows:

(a) (b) (c): 67 staff in my Department in grades 1 to 5 have an arts degree, representing 45 per cent. of the total in these grades.

Fifty-six staff in these grades have a science or technical degree, representing 37 per cent. of the total.

(d) Two persons in these grades are qualified accountants —1·3 per cent. of the total.

(e) No staff in these grades have postgraduate qualifications in management.

Motorcycles

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the proposed EC anti-tampering directive on motorbikes on (a) the cost of running a motorcycle, (b) the price of new bikes and (c) the United Kingdom's performance and racing industry;

(2) if his Department will oppose the EC's proposed anti-tampering directive on motorbikes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The EC Commission has not yet presented a proposal for a directive to the Council of Ministers for consideration. It would be premature to take a view on the United Kingdom's approach and to make an assessment of the likely effects of the measure before they do so.

London and South-East

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the total amount of support given by his Department to (a) London Transport and (b) Network SouthEast for each year from 1982-83 to 1992-93, estimated, distinguishing between current and capital expenditure.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows.

Government grant to London Transport and Network SouthEast:

	London transport
£ million 1993-94 prices Year	Capital	Current	Total
1982-83[1]	336	216	552
1983-84[1]	276	296	572
1984-85[1]	192	236	428
1985-86	297	187	484
1986-87	333	94	427
1987-88	269	65	334
1988-89	222	28	250
1989-90	291	58	349
1990-91	502	94	596
1991-92	557	130	687
1992-93[2]	664	241	905

[1] Grant paid by GLC.

[2] Excludes DLR. In 1992-93 the Department of the Environment paid grant of £149 million for DLR.

	Network SouthEast
£ million 1993-94 prices Year	Capital	Current	Total
1987-88	—	—	230
1988-89	—	—	140
1989-90	—	—	86
1990-91	—	—	146
1991-92	165	190	355
1992-93	454	121	575

In addition to investment funded from Government support, both industries can also fund investment from their own resources. The figures for Network SouthEast show Public Service Obligation Grant to Network SouthEast from its creation in 1987-88. Due to accounting changes, no directly comparable figures for capital/current split are available before 1991-92.

Local Authority Buses

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation to require local authorities to dispose of their interests in bus companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I cannot, of course, anticipate what may be in the legislative programme for next session, but we do intend in this Parliament to fulfil our pledge given before the last General Election that we will take action to privatise the remaining local authority bus companies.

Meanwhile, I am encouraged that there have been three sales in the last six months, Merseybus, Strathclyde and Preston Borough Transport, and I know that many other local authorities have expressed a desire to transfer their public transport companies to the private sector.

Local Authority Airports

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation to require local authorities to dispose of their interests in airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The Government believe that privatisation would bring benefits to local authority airports. It is for the local authorities who own airports to decide whether to dispose of their interests, taking into account the needs of those who live in the areas concerned and the customers who use the airports. In taking those decisions they will be aware that if they wish to see their airports continue to develop, they will need to use internal resources or look to the private sector to fund major expenditure programmes, either through joint ventures or outright sale.

Buses and Trains (Elasticity Figures)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the patronage elasticity of bus mileage.

Mr. Freeman: Available studies suggest that an elasticity of around 0·5 is typical. However, figures will vary widely between areas and according to the form the extra bus mileage takes; it might involve, for example, higher frequencies on existing routes or the introduction of new routes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the bus patronage elasticity of changes in the level and in the rate of growth of car ownership.

Mr. Freeman: Available studies suggest that an aggregate elasticity of around −0·5 is typical. However, relationships in particular areas will differ according to individual circumstances and economic conditions. These overall relationships may not apply to short-term changes in car ownership.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the patronage elasticity of service frequency for buses and for trains.

Mr. Freeman: For buses, available studies suggest a central range of 0·4 to 0·6, but estimates vary from 0·16 to 1·0. Figures will vary widely depending on factors such as the frequency of the current service. Peak period demand is likely to be more responsive to a change in frequency than is off peak demand.

For trains, I understand that British Rail does not normally use a standard service elasticity figure. In forecasting demand, service frequencies are considered along with journey time and other attributes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the price elasticity of bus fares.

Mr. Freeman: Available studies suggest that an elasticity of −0·3 is typical, with a range of perhaps −0·1 to −0·6. Figures will vary depending on factors such as the purpose of the journey, its length, and the extent to which alternative transport is available.

Sunken Container Ships

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has received to date of the locations of sunken container ships that are floating submerged in the world's ocean waterways; what action he has taken to warn United Kingdom shipping companies and their ships masters of their reported whereabouts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has received no information of any such cases. However, masters have an international obligation to report the sighting of a dangerous derelict vessel or any other direct dangers to navigation to all ships in the vicinity and to the appropriate shore authority. Navigation warnings will be issued by the hydrographic office responsible for the area concerned.

HEALTH

St. Helier's NHS Trust

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated in Sutton under the St. Helier's NHS trust since it was set up.

Mr. Sackville: The only information available centrally is shown in the table.

Patients treated by the St. Helier NHS trust 1991-92

	Number
Ordinary admissions	20,986
Day cases	4,643
Out-patients	202,025

National Disability Information Project

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress made with the national disability information project; what applications for resource support have been received from federations of local information providers from the national disability information project fund; and what allocations of resources have been made.

Mr. Yeo: We received 101 applications from federations to become pilot sites. 12 pilot sites were selected, with funding as follows:

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Berkshire	18,400	33,590	36,400
Birmingham	70,850	62,500	64,344
Devon	26,100	38,500	51,000

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
North East Yorkshire	24,161	59,697	72,873
Gateshead	48,000	62,820	67,380
Gloucestershire	30,301	38,100	37,300
Kent	64,000	53,660	65,000
Manchester	19,931	54,700	70,000
Norfolk	16,565	49,631	62,500
Oldham	37,589	56,119	81,982
Southwark	21,338	49,282	65,450
Walsall	32,963	46,850	48,000

The project is being co-ordinated on the Department's behalf by the Policy Studies Institute (PSI). The PSI report that the pilots have made important developments in the dissemination of information to disabled people. A formal evaluation is being carried out by the Research Institute for Consumer Affairs, who will report to the Department of Health after the project ends in 1994-95.

NHS Security Review

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the report of the recent review into security and crime prevention in the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: We have today placed copies of the full report and executive summary in the Library.

Nurse-to-Bed Ratio

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 381, how many (a) beds and (b) nurses were available in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Total numbers of average available beds and nursing and midwifery staff in the NHS—England 1979—1990-91

Years	Average available beds	Nurses and midwives (excl agency) (whole-time equivalent)
1979	361,670	354,420
1980	355,980	365,900
1981	351,500	388,010
1982	348,100	394,040
1983	343,090	394,690
1984	334,510	393,740
1985	325,490	397,030
1986	315,710	397,240
1987-88	297,340	397,910
1988-89	282,900	397,840
1989-90	270,310	398,050
1990-91	255,440	395,360
1991-92	242,360	392,200

1. All figures are rounded to the nearest ten except for the 1980 nurses and midwives figure which is rounded to the nearest hundred.
2. From 1987 onwards, the daily available beds figure is averaged over the year whereas the nurses and midwives figures are as at September of each year.

Angiosarcoma of the Liver

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the small area health statistics unit will complete its survey into the geographical incidence of angiosarcoma of the liver in Great Britain in relation to vinyl chloride plants.

Dr. Mawhinney: The small area health statistics unit will complete its vinyl chloride study later this year.

Small Area Health Statistics Unit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports from the small area health statistics unit have been published other than those relating to cancer.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 8 February at column 74.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual budget for the small area health statistics unit for each year since 1987; what proportion of the annual budget for the small area health statistics unit is provided by her Department; how the remaining budget is provided; and how many small area health statistics unit investigations have resulted in prosecutions against employers.

Dr. Mawhinney: The annual budgets for the small area health statistics unit (SAHSU) since 1987 and the proportions contributed by the sponsoring Departments are shown in the tables.

Contribution

	Per cent.
Department of Health	40
Department of the Environment	33
Health and Safety Executive	10

1989-90	350
1990-91	417
1991-92	517
1992-93	538

We are not aware of any SAHSU investigations resulting in prosecutions against employers.

Air Pollution

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has available of mortality rates resulting from air pollution.

Mr. Sackville: None. The recording of mortality statistics in the United Kingdom uses the International Classification of Diseases. This does not specify air pollution as a diagnosis.

Cancer

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research she has conducted into socio-economic factors in cancers, by cancer type.

Mr. Sackville: The Department does not conduct research specifically into socio-economic factors in cancers. The Department's estimated expenditure on research into cancer in the financial year 1992-93 is £4,188,733. Several of the projects being undertaken cover socio-economic factors as part of the wider research.

Infections, Hampshire

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of (a) tuberculosis, (b) dysentery and (c) viral hepatitis were reported in (i) Southampton and (ii) Hampshire for each year since 1983.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Notified cases of tuberculosis (TB) dysentery/viral hepatitis 1983-1992 for Southampton and Hampshire.

Access to Health Records Act 1990

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to make regulations under sections 8(2), (3) and (10)(1) of the Access to Health Records Act 1990; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: There are no immediate plans to make such regulations. Any complaint that a hospital has not complied with the Act can be dealt with under the existing hospital complaints procedures. In all cases, complaints can be taken direct to the courts. We will, however, continue to keep the need for regulations under review.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the numbers and percentages of her staff in grades one to five who have (a) arts degrees, (b) science degrees, (c) technical degrees, (d) who are qualified accountants and (e) have post-graduate qualifications in management.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

These figures exclude people seconded into the Department, which includes a number of experienced accountants and national health service managers. We do not collate centrally information on the numbers of staff who have post-graduate qualifications in management, but all members of staff in these grades attend in-house and external management courses, some of which lead to formal qualifications.

The percentages in this table relate to all staff in the grade, not just those with recorded qualifications.

Laboratory Technicians

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if laboratory technicians working for national health service hospitals are designated as medical laboratory scientific officers; and if such persons are required to have MLSO training before they can apply for employment in the NHS as laboratory technicians.

Dr. Mawhinney: Medical laboratory scientific officer (MLSO) is a term used to describe staff who perform a certain range of technical, analytical and investigative functions in national health service clinical laboratories. Pay and grading agreements of the NHS professional and technical staffs B Whitley council require staff discharging that range of MLSO functions to meet the qualification and training requirements of and be registered as medical laboratory technicians under the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act (1960).

Cataract Operations, Hull

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now make it her policy to collect information about the current waiting time for cataract operations at the Hull royal infirmary.

Mr. Sackville: No. Information on waiting times for ophthalmology treatment, which includes cataract operations, in district health authorities and national health service trusts is available routinely in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", the latest edition of which is available in the Library.

NHS Land

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the quantity and value of land held by the national health service in (a) 1990 and (b) the latest available date.

Mr. Sackville: The area of land held by the national health service at 31 December 1989 was estimated at 16,719 hectares. The equivalent figure for 1 April 1992 (the latest available) is estimated to be 16,158 hectares.

The total existing use value of NHS land and buildings as at 31 December 1989 was £23,447,056,000. The apportionment between land and building values at 31 December 1989 is not available from centrally held returns. The total existing use value of NHS land and buildings as at 1 April 1992 is estimated at £21,447,463,000, of which £5,755,453,000 may be taken to relate to the landholding.

Qa Business Services

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings she has held, and what plans she has to hold meetings with representatives of former employees of Qa Business Services to discuss their loss of pension rights.

Mr. Sackville: None. I have offered to meet the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) and other hon. Members to hear representations on behalf of constituents affected by the collapse of Qa Business Services.

Purchasing Development

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who she intends to consult when considering the establishment of the national purchaser development team.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are undertaking a series of meetings with all regional health authorities and the chairmen of district health authorities and family health services authorities to discuss progress on purchasing. We will consider what further action might be needed to support the development of purchasing in the light of these discussions.

Elderly Patients

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring of the work of general practitioners in respect of their care of over-75-year-old patients is being undertaken; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Family health services authorities are responsible for monitoring of general practitioners locally, in respect of all services provided by GPs.

In addition, the Department of Health has commissioned research from the centre for primary care research (CPCR) in Manchester into the operation of the 75+ health check.

The Department also commissioned a survey from MORI into patients' reactions to the new GP contract. The MORI survey (conducted in 1991) found that almost four out of five of those 75+ patients offered a check-up took advantage of it and nine out of 10 of those who had a check-up found it useful.

AIDS

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total Government expenditure on HIV/AIDS medical research; and if she will provide an estimate of total expenditure from all sources on HIV/AIDS medical reseach.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 26 April 1993, c. 280]: The cumulative total of Government funding for AIDS medical research for the financial years 1986-87 to 1992-93 is £66,170,000. This represents the sum made available to the Medical Research Council (MRC) for a directed programme of AIDS research covering vaccine development and to improve our understanding of the natural history of the virus.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Bailiffs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to impose restrictions on the current powers granted to bailiffs to sell off stock cheaply in order to meet debts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor is presently reviewing the organisation and management of those empowered to remove and sell goods to meet the payment of debts. A consultation paper was issued on 4 August 1992, which canvassed, inter alia, whether changes are necessary to the law governing the sale of goods seized in payment of debt. Following the consultation, officials are preparing advice on the subject for the Lord Chancellor to consider.

Small Claims Courts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consideration he is giving to altering the upper limit of claims in the small claims court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: We are keeping the small claims limit under review and plan to raise it as soon as practicable. However, we have not at this stage finalised the level to which it will be raised, nor the date on which this will take place.

The level was last increased to £1,000 in 1991. Any further increase may capture cases of greater complexity than those for which the procedure was designed. We are concerned to have appropriate procedures in place to deal with such cases before raising the small claims limit further.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Education Staff

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 March to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock), Official Report, column 113, what further consideration he has given to the consequences for the tendering out of the prison education service of the acquired rights directive.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Harry Greenway, dated 8 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what further consideration has been given to the consequences for the competitive tendering of prison education of the Acquired Rights Directive.

At those establishments where final decisions have not already been taken about who is to be the future provider of education services, the Prison Service will invite all the tenderers originally invited to bid to submit further bids on the basis that the European Community Acquired Rights Directive and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 will apply. This is without prejudice to whether or not an appeal is lodged against the High Court judgment in the case of Kenny and Woodroff v. South Manchester College.

European Parliament Elections

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 22 April, Official Report, columns 181-82, if he expects that EC nationals resident in the United Kingdom will generally have the right to vote in the 1994 European Parliament elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes.

Hosni E. Farhat

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding the resignation or early retirement of any of the police officers involved in the conviction of Hosni E. Farhat.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. This is a matter for the chief constable of Hampshire constabulary.

Immigration (Police Questioning)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were stopped and questioned by the Metropolitan police for immigration matters during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: This information is not available.

Violence (Mobile Telephones)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police forces which are experimenting with the use of mobile telephones to deter domestic and racial violence; when the trial in West Yorkshire is to be evaluated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not collected centrally, but those conducting experiments with mobile phones and alarms include: Leicester, Bradford, Islington and Wandsworth safer cities projects and the Merseyside, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and the Metropolitan police forces.

The experiment in Leeds was evaluated internally in October 1992 and has now been extended across the West Yorkshire force.

Police Manpower

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the level of police personnel in 1963 and 1993, in the United Kingdom, the west midlands and Solihull including the level of civilian posts; how many uniformed police were on the beat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1963 there were 80,251 police officers and 13,579 civilian staff in England and Wales. Information for 1963 in respect of the West Midlands and Solihull is not available.

Current figures are given in the table. As data on deployment are collected annually, the figures are for December 1992.

	England and Wales	West Midlands Police	[1] Solihull
Police strength	128,045	6,952	[2]125
Beat/patrol	53,994	3,496	[3]21-25
Civilian staff	49,162	2,471	22

[1] Figures are for the Solihull Sub-division, provided by the West Midlands Police.
[2] Total number of officers available to the sub-division.
[3] Officers available at any one time for beat and patrol. Number of officers varies depending upon shift arrangements.

Wolds and Lindholme Prisons

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents and disturbances took place between April 1992 and April 1993 at (a) HM prison Wolds and (b) HM prison Lindholme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Michael Clapham, dated 10 May 1993:

HM PRISONS WOLDS AND LINDHOLME

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of incidents and disturbances which have taken place between April 1992 and April 1993 at (a) HM Prison Wolds and (b) HM Prison Lindholme.

There have been a total of 95 reported incidents at Wolds Remand Prison and 463 at HMP Lindholme in the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993.

During this period, the average daily population of Wolds, a secure modern prison building, was 190. Lindholme, a medium secure prison, (formerly RAF accommodation), with an open prison facility had an average daily population of 644. The figures given include failure to return from home leave, absconding, surrender by a prisoner and recapture of a prisoner. These will be much higher for Lindholme, since Wolds prisoners are remand prisoners who are not granted home leave, and because Wolds does not have an open prison facility.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the ratio of staff to prisoners at (a) HM prison Wolds and (b) HM prison Lindholme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the prison service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Michael Clapham, dated 8 May 1993:

HM PRISONS WOLDS AND LINDHOLME

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the ratio of staff to prisoners at (a) HM Prison Wolds and (b) HM Prison Lindholme

The ratio of staff to prisoners at Wolds Remand Prison on 31 March 1993 was 1:1·520. For HM Prison Lindholme the figure for the same day was 1:1·518.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing (a) the total number of recorded crimes in 1992, (b) the number of crimes committed in each category in England and Wales for each quarter of 1992 and (c) the percentage increase that each figure represents over the equivalent quarter in 1991.

Mr. Jack: The required information is given in the table.

Fire Services

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by each fire service the standard spending assessment for 1993-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table sets out the fire and civil defence element of each English fire authority's standard spending assessment for 1993-94. There is no separately identifiable fire and civil defence element of Welsh fire authorities' standard spending assessments.

River Safety

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to publish an account of progress in the implementation of recommendations made after major disasters as recommended in the Hayes report on river safety.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans to publish such an account. Efforts are concentrated on disseminating lessons learnt from disasters through incorporation into suitable guidance.

Mr. A. Ali

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letters to him of 14 January, 19 February and 6 April with regard to Mr. A. Ali, of 39 Brynton road, sent to him by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend replied to the right hon. Member on 10 May 1993.

Bail

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what mechanism courts enforce conditions attaching to the grant of bail; which body holds the passport of an accused person where this has been required to be surrendered under bail conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The courts have wide discretion over the conditions which they may impose on a defendant to whom they have granted bail. Enforcement of any such conditions will depend upon the nature of the condition, but in the case of conditions requiring the person concerned to report to a police station, enforcement is for the police.

A person who has been granted bail may be arrested by the police without warrant if they have reasonable grounds for believing that he has broken, or is likely to break, bail conditions. Where the court has ordered the surrender of a passport as a condition of bail, the passport is obtained and kept by the police.

Uranium

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what current legislation in the United Kingdom a person can be prosecuted for allegedly trafficking in uranium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: I have been asked to reply.

Export of uranium in various forms from the United Kingdom without a licence is prohibited under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992 as amended. Import into the United Kingdom of various forms of uranium from non-EC sources without a licence is prohibited under the Import of Goods (Control) Order 1954 as amended. In addition there are controls in the legislation implementing sanctions resolutions of the United Nations. Full details of the controlled items and exceptions to the controls are given in the respective orders. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise enforce import and export restrictions and prosecute breaches under the provisions of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979. Any information about possible breaches of the controls should be reported to them.

ENVIRONMENT

Sellafield

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which stacks at BNFL Sellafield are included in emissions authorisations as (a) schedule 1 stacks and (b) schedule 2 stacks.

Mr. Maclean: The schedule 1 stacks are the B204, B6 Vessel Vent and B230 stacks. The schedule 2 stacks are the B6 Cell Vent, B38 third extension, B355 and B389 stacks.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the emissions from each schedule 1 stack at BNFL Sellafield for each year since records are available.

Mr. Maclean: The emissions for each schedule 1 stack are given in the table. Where there are no entries for particular radionuclides this reflects the fact that there was no potential for these radionuclides to be released from these stacks.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the annual authorised limits for radioactive emissions from (a) schedule 1 stacks and (b) schedule 2 stacks at BNFL Sellafield.

Water

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of (a) social and economic factors, (b) the proportion of the nation's designated bathing waters located and (c) recent and projected rises in average water bills in the different regions in determining policy over the funding of implementation of the EC's bathing waters, urban waste waters and shellfish waters directives.

Mr. Maclean: The arrangements for the funding of the water industry under the legislation of 1989 took into account the varying purposes of capital expenditure in different areas. Water charges are controlled under statute by the Director General of Water Services and inter alia allow for the cost of meeting obligations under EC directives.

Landfill Sites (Methane Gas)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an assessment of the current emissions of methyl gas from landfill sites and its implications for global warming.

Mr. Maclean: Only a very rough estimate of methane emissions from landfill sites has been possible in the past because of considerable uncertainties in the basic information used to calculate a national figure. My Department has accordingly commissioned research by the energy technology support unit of DTI. Based on this research, our best estimate for methane emissions from landfill in the United Kingdom is approximately 2 million tonnes per annum, but with a possible range between 0·6 and 5 million tonnes per annum. These estimates will be revised and updated as more information on the factors affecting methane generation from landfill is obtained.

Methane is the second most significant anthropogenic greenhouse gas after carbon dioxide. The Government are aiming to publish a national programme to meet the United Nations climate change convention commitment to return emissions of all greenhouse gases to their 1980 levels by the year 2000.

National Parks

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now intends to bring forward legislation to provide for all national parks to be administered by independent boards.

Mr. Maclean: Our policy statement on the national parks, published in January 1992, promised legislation to create independent authorities for the eight national parks in England and Wales currently run as county council committees. We fully recognise the importance of this legislation and we intend to bring it forward at the earliest opportunity.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his oral answer of 28 April, Official Report, column 950, which developed countries currently cannot economically make provision for their own recycling of toxic waste.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available. However, during negotiations on the EC waste shipments regulation not all member states welcomed as much as the United Kingdom the provisions relating to national self-sufficiency. The final text therefore enables member states to ban imports for disposal from other member states and EFTA countries unless the state of origin produces such a small quantity of hazardous waste that it would be uneconomic to provide new specialised disposal facilities.

Coastal Protection

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to create a coastal protection and planning unit as recommended by the Environment Select Committee in its second report of 1991-92, (HC 17).

Mr. Maclean: The Government in their response of July 1992 to the report of the Environment Select Committee on coastal zone protection and planning explained that coastal policy in the United Kingdom has, since 1991, been co-ordinated at official level through an interdepartmental group. The secretariat for this group is within the Department of the Environment. It would not be appropriate for the group to take on major executive functions.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review current legislation for coastal zone activities.

Mr. Maclean: The Government in their response of July 1992 to the report of the Environment Select Committee on coastal zone protection and planning undertook to review legislation controlling development below the low water mark; management of activities such as recreation in coastal waters; and the regulation of marine aggregates dredging. The results of these reviews will be available later this year.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for a national coastal strategy and for consolidating legislation and regulations to give effect to coastal zone management.

Mr. Maclean: The Government in their response of July 1992 to the report of the Environment Select Committee on coastal zone protection and planning stated its commitment to further the management of the coastal zone within a clear framework of national policy. Recent initiatives include planning guidance for the coast, support for heritage coasts, and a substantial programme of investment to improve the quality of coastal waters. Further work is under way on a national strategy for flood and coastal defence, reviews of the control of development below the low water mark and of marine aggregates extraction, and implementation of the EC habitats directive.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the Environmental Protection Agency to be given responsibility and powers to integrate and monitor coastal activities to ensure prudent coastal management.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have no such plans.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those powers and functions which are under consideration for local authorities' jurisdiction to extend below the low water mark.

Mr. Maclean: The Government stated in their response of July 1992 to the report of the Environment Select Committee on coastal zone protection and planning that they are not persuaded that extension of local authority planning powers is necessarily the most effective approach to the control of development below the low water mark. The Government are currently reviewing controls over development in this area, including construction projects, oil and gas exploitation, marine aggregates extraction and disposal at sea.

Social Services, Greenwich

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name the parliamentary under secretaries and the Ministers of State responsible for advising the successive Secretaries of State for the Environment since 1981 on the social service standard spending assessment for Greenwich.

Mr. Robin Squire: Standard spending assessments were introduced for the first time in the financial year 1990-91. The current and previous Parliamentary Under-Secretaries and Ministers of State responsible for advising on these assessments are:

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State

Mr. Christopher Chope
Rt. Hon. Virginia Bottomley
Mr. Patrick Nicholls
Rt. Hon. Baroness Blatch
Mr. Robert Key
Mr. Robin Squire

Minister of State

Rt. Hon. Michael Howard
Rt. Hon. John Gummer
Rt. Hon. David Hunt
Rt. Hon. Michael Portillo
Mr. John Redwood

Housing, Solihull

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the criteria used to calculate the land requirement for housing up to the year 2011 in the unitary development plan for Solihull.

Mr. Baldry: The Solihull unitary development plan incorporates a housing land requirement to 2001 as approved in "Strategic Guidance for the West Midlands", Planning Policy Guidance Note 10. Provision for the period beyond 2001 is for the local authority to determine in the light of the inspector's recommendations on its unitary development plan and national policy set down in Planning Policy Guidance Note 2 (Green Belts).

Green Housekeeping

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the reasons why his Department's policy statement on green housekeeping implies that (a) some use of hardwoods and (b) some use of peat, may continue.

Mr. Maclean: Our policy is to specify only the use of hardwoods which come from sustainably managed sources. We do not in practice envisage making exceptions for such hardwoods, or for peat substitutes. In principle, however, they might need to be allowed for, in some possible circumstances and situations, if there were no practicable alternatives.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the reasons why his Department's policy statement on green housekeeping regards a ceiling of 70 to 75 per cent. as the current practicable limit for the purchase of recycled paper.

Mr. Maclean: Our policy is to keep the use of non-recycled paper to a minimum but some printing processes require its use to operate effectively. The target figure of 70 to 75 per cent. use of recycled paper will be revised as appropriate to take account of developments in printing and paper technologies.

OFWAT

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what, for each of the last two years and for the current year, is the total operational cost of the Office of Water Services.

Mr. Maclean: Details of OFWAT's costs for 1991-92 and its budget for 1992-93 are contained in the director general's "Annual Report 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. The report records that in 1991-92 OFWAT's budget was £6·29 million, and for 1992-93 £7·52 million. £9·7 million has been voted in estimates—class VII, vote 9—to cover the expenditure of OFWAT for 1993-94.

Spending Assessment, Greenwich

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer from the Secretary of State for Health on 4 May, how much more money would be received by Greenwich council from taxpayers through central Government grant if the standard spending assessment for 1993-94 were increased by the figure indicated by the social factor information now available from the 1991 census.

Mr. Robin Squire: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, Official Report, 4 May 1993, col 45, indicated that the percentage increase in the standard spending assessment for personal social services for Greenwich, if information on social factors from the 1991 census information were to be included, would be 9·8 per cent. The equivalent increase for the total standard spending assessment would be 4·7 per cent, amounting to some £9 million. This is also broadly the amount by which the level of revenue support grant would increase. The current review of standard spending assessments will involve a number of further changes and may result in a different outcome for 1994-95 when it is completed later this year.

Environment Week

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support his Department plans to give to Environment Week, sponsored by the Civic Trust, 22 to 31 May.

Mr. Maclean: BT environment week aims to encourage local initiatives in the voluntary sector. My Department funds a number of organisations which will participate in events during the week. I plan to open an exhibition on 21 May by the Penrith Civic Society, which will run throughout the week and to visit a rural action scheme project on 25 May.

Mobile Homes

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have taken place between officials of his Department and selected interested organisations in respect of a mobile park home owner's charter; and if he will take steps to ensure that any such charter reflects the interests of residents of mobile park homes as well as site owners.

Mr. Baldry: A charter was issued by the Confederation of Park Homes Industry last December. A copy of the draft charter was also sent by my Department to the chairmen of the Association of Park Home Owners and the National Association of Park Home Residents. My officials will meet both of these organisations later this month. Later they will meet COPHI. My Department has monitored the responses from residents and their associations throughout the consultation exercise and will seek to ensure that all reasonable points are met as far as possible.

British Waterways Board

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to privatise the British Waterways Board; what estimate of asset proceeds he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no plans to privatise the British Waterways Board.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present salary and the value of other emoluments expenses and awards, including pension contributions, of the chairs of each of the urban development corporations.

Mr. Robin Squire: The present salaries of the UDC chairmen are as follows:—

UDC	Salary (£)
Birmingham Heartlands	25,315
Black Country	25,315
Bristol	18,990
Central Manchester	18,990
Leeds	18,990
London Docklands	37,795
Merseyside	18,990
Plymouth	25,315
Sheffield	18,990
Teesside	25,315
Trafford Park	37,975
Tyne & Wear	18,990

There are no other emoluments, awards, or pension contributions. Chairmen entitled to pensions are required to contribute at the appropriate rate.

Travel and subsistence expenses are payable in accordance with rates agreed by the Department.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has for the average length of stay per homeless household living in temporary accommodation before being offered permanent housing by the responsible local authority.

Mr. Baldry: The information is not available centrally and my Department has no estimates.

Halons

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to nominate candidates for essential use of halons under the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer for continued production in 1994.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are committed to keeping extra production for "essential uses" to a minimum. In order to be considered for extra production after phaseout, applications must meet a number of strict criteria agreed by parties to the Montreal protocol at their meeting in Copenhagen last year. These criteria include that the use is essential to protect health, safety or critical to the functioning of society; that there are no technically or economically feasible alternatives; and that there is insufficient supply of banked or recycled material available.

The Government have scrutinised all nominations made to them for continued production of halons in 1994 and consider that six uses meet all the criteria at this time. These are:

(i) the use of halon 1211 in civil aircraft cockpits and passenger cabins;
(ii) the use of halon 1301 in the cargo compartments of civil aircraft;
(iii) the use of halon 1301 in civil aircraft engine nacelles;
(iv) the use of halon 1211 on civil airport rescue and fire fighting vehicles;
(v) the use of halon 1301 in the engine compartments of the class 92 and 373 locomotives;
(vi) the use of halon 1301 in various applications in existing installations in the offshore oil and gas industry including control rooms, diver support areas and radio rooms.

We shall be proposing that the parties to the Montreal protocol agree that production should be allowed in 1994 for these six uses. This is likely to involve new production of some 30 tonnes of halons for United Kingdom uses in 1994 compared with a total estimated United Kingdom consumption of some 1,500 tonnes in 1990.

There are a few other uses which might fulfil some but not all of the criteria—because of the efforts of those concerned to bank and recycle halons they do not need new production in 1994. I hope that the efforts of the Halon Users' National Consortium will soon show that sufficient quantities of recycled material are available to meet all continuing needs.

We shall be considering what nominations, if any, we put forward for continued production in 1995 later this year.

Ozone Levels

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has on levels of stratospheric ozone over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Measurements of stratospheric ozone made at Camborne and Lerwick during April 1993 show levels of total column ozone between 8 per cent. and 11 per cent. below the long-term April average. Although the ozone levels reman lower than the long-term average, the April values can be compared with decreases of 10 per cent. to 13 per cent. observed in March and over 20 per cent. seen in February. Individual daily measurements during April were consistently low, but were within the range of previously measured values.

The Department's stratospheric ozone review group will include the latest interpretation of the ozone measurements made during 1992-93 in their next report which is due to be published in the autumn.

Street Lighting

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for increasing the resources available to council authorities for the improvement of street lighting.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

It is for local authorities to decide the appropriate level of expenditure on street lighting according to their own priorities. There are no plans to specify particular amounts for this type of expenditure.

TRANSPORT

Consultants

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that the relevant local highway authorities are invited to submit proposals to undertake the work carried out by consultants on the maintenance and management of trunk roads and motorways in a form which can be compared with bids from the private sector.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is our policy in selecting maintenance agents to ensure that we secure maximum value for money in terms of the quality and efficiency of the services provided. In making arrangements for the replacement in due course of existing consultants' commissions we are committed to evaluating the quality and cost of the services available from local authorities and private sector consultants. The form and timing of this evaluation is still being considered.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will carry out an assessment of the performance of consultants carrying out agency responsibilities for the maintenance and management of trunk roads and motorways in comparison with local authority agents; if he will consult the local authority associations on the basis of the comparison; and if he will publish the results.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All consultants employed by the Department as maintenance agents are subject to performance assessment. My officials have agreed performance indicators with representatives of the local authority associations, which will facilitate comparisons of performance by different agents, and these are now being used on a trial basis to assess the 1992-93 performance of a number of agents throughout the country. Any decision on publication of the results of comparisons will be taken in consultation with the local authority associations when the results are available.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each local highway authority in England the percentage of its total bid for transport supplementary grant for 1993-94 included in its 1992 transport policy and programme which was accepted by the Government for grant.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information is given in the table.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each local highway authority in England the percentage of its bids for 1993-94 made in its 1992 transport policy and programme submission accepted for transport supplementary grant for (a) major road schemes, (b) minor works on local safety schemes, (c) structural maintenance on roads, (d) bus priority measures and (e) structural maintenance on bridges.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All available information on transport supplementary grant for the categories listed is given in the table. It is not possible to give figures for bus priority measures. Most bids for such schemes under the transport supplementary grant system are included as part of "other minor works". Allocations under that category are not given for specific types of scheme. The answer to the related question on bus priority measures indicates total credit approvals issued to local authorities for that purpose.

Bus Priority Measures

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each local highway authority in England the bids for 1993-94 made in its 1992 transport policy and programme for grant or credit approval for bus priority measures and the grant or borrowing consent awarded in each of those areas.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is shown in the table. Details of the proportion of their transport supplementary grant allocation that local authorities allocate to bus priority measures are not available.

[1] Part SCA and part Transport Supplementary Grant.
Authorities which did not bid are not listed.

Cycles (Warning Devices)

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the requirements for pedal cycles to carry audible warning devices such as bells; if he will review the present requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Pedal cycles are not required at present to be fitted with audible warning devices such as bells. We are currently considering updating the Pedal Bicycles (Safety) Regulations and the Pedal Cycles (Construction and Use) Regulations with a view to incorporating into them the latest British standard on the construction of pedal cycles. We shall be taking the opportunity at the same time to review the position on the compulsory fitting and use of bells.

London Regional Transport

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to privatise London Regional Transport; what estimate of asset proceeds he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Plans for the privatisation of the London Buses Ltd. subsidiaries are well under way. However, I have no plans at present to privatise the remaining parts of London Regional Transport and have therefore made no estimate of the potential sale proceeds.

River Safety

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has undertaken since July 1992 into improving safety and rescue standards on rivers and inland waters; and what methods were used in such research as recommended by the Hayes report on river safety.

Mr. Norris: Research carried out since July 1992 includes projects dealing with the safety of control systems on high speed craft, damage and impact stability of high-speed passenger craft, and the applicability of safety assessment techniques to passenger vessels.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to publish an account of progress in the implementation of recommendations made after major disasters recommended in the Hayes report on river safety.

Mr. Norris: A summary of progress on the implementation of the Hayes report recommendations will be published next month.

Progress on the recommendations of the Hidden report was described in the answer of my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport on 12 November 1992, column 964.

I reported progress on the Fennel report on 7 December, column 464.

Marine Safety Committees

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 July 1992, Official Report, column 102, if he will list the titles of all the district marine safety committees and their sub-committees that have been established; and if he would further state for each such committee and sub-committee (a) its composition, (b) its terms of reference and (c) the dates on which it has met.

Mr. Norris: I will write to the hon. Member with this information.

Private Aircraft

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what records are kept of flights made by private aircraft from United Kingdom airports and airfields; what requirements exist on pilots to register proposed flight paths and names and numbers of passengers; and in what respects these requirements and records are different for flights going overseas from internal flights.

Mr. Norris: Civil aviation legislation does not formally require official records of flights made by private aircraft to be kept by airports. However, most airports or airfields do maintain logbooks. In addition, under the terms of article 23 of the Air Navigation Order 1989 any member of the flight crew of an aircraft is required to maintain personal flying logbooks, in which they are required to record a variety of information, including the date and the places at which the crew member embarked on and disembarked from the aircraft at the end of each flight.

Under the rules of the air the commander of an aircraft arriving at or departing from an aerodrome in the United Kingdom shall take all reasonable steps to ensure upon landing or prior to departure, as the case may be, that notice of that event is given to the person in charge of the aerodrome, or to the air traffic control unit or aerodrome flight information unit at the aerodrome. This is known as booking-in or out, but names of passengers are not included. He is also required to file a flight plan for air traffic control purposes when the aircraft is expected to fly in controlled airspace under instrument flight rules.

When intending to cross an international flight information region boundary all aircraft pilots are required to file a flight plan and provide information identifying the type of the aircraft, the destination and the number of individuals on board the aircraft. A flight plan is also required if the total weight of the aircraft exceeds 5,700 kg and its intended destination is more than 40 km from the point of departure. This information is required primarily for potential search and rescue purposes and again the names of the passengers are not included.

Twyford Down (Private Detectives)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, (1) pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, columns 699-700, what is the total sum of moneys paid to Brays Detective Agency (Southampton) Ltd. by his Department since February 1992;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 772, on how many people papers have been served by Brays Detective Agency in connection with Twyford Down.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answers 10 May 1993]: As at end April, Bray's Detective Agency (Southampton) had been paid approximately £35,000. Following my answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 772, the agency had served papers on an additional three individuals.

A30

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to publish the detailed design and construction timetable for the new separated junction at Kennards house on the A30 near Launceston.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 10 May 1993]: We are making good progress with the initial preparation of this scheme and aim to consult the public on our proposals during the summer.

Progress thereafter will depend on public reaction to our consultation proposals and to the subsequent statutory orders.

Marine Accident Investigation Branch

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances he is able to order an MAIB inquiry under section 33(7) of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The Merchant Shipping Act 1988 does not provide any limitation on the functions that may be conferred on the chief inspector of marine accidents, or other inspectors, in addition to the basic functions of investigating casualties to ships, or other incidents involving ships. However, such action would be taken only where it is considered appropriate and after careful consideration had been given to all the prevailing circumstances. Such consideration would include taking into account investigations either planned or in progress by other competent authorities or administrations.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

EC Research Ministers

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the meeting of European research Ministers on 29 April.

Mr. Waldegrave: A policy debate was held on the fourth EC research and development framework programme, on the basis of the Commission's new working document. There was broad agreement on the structure of the framework and on the need to ensure proper dissemination and exploitation of EC research: further discussion will take place on content and financing before the next Council of Ministers on 30 June. Conclusions were also agreed on space, which underlined the need for closer links between the EC and the European Space Agency.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. A. Nadir

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to apply to the Turkish authorities for Mr. A. Nadir to be placed under British jurisdiction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have an extradition treaty with the Republic of Cyprus, but the writ of the Government does not run in the north of the island.

Immediately after Nadir's abscondment, our High Commissioner in Nicosia met Turkish Cypriot leader Mr. Denktash on 5 May to demand that Nadir be handed over to the British authorities.

On 7 May I summoned the Turkish ambassador to explain the anger felt in this country and ask for Turkish assistance in ensuring Nadir's return.

The Turkish Cypriots should appreciate the damage it could do to their interests if they were to acquire a reputation as a refuge for fugitives from justice.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Projects

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what current United Kingdom Government financial aid projects for Kenya are due for renewal funding during this year; and if a decision will be made on this issue.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Decisions on a number of development projects will be required during the course of the year; these will be reached at the appropriate time taking account of all relevant factors.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the United Kingdom Government have to increase the aid to sub-Saharan Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 10 February, at column 665.

Narmada Dam, India

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on future funding of the Narmada dam project in India (a) bilaterally and (b) through the World bank.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of India asked the World bank to cancel the outstanding balance, some $170 million, of the bank's loan for the Sardar Sarovar dam project in the Narmada valley, India. Various studies agreed between the Government of India and the World bank, initiated prior to the cancellation of the loan and financed with United Kingdom grants, will be completed.

Africa

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the World bank to redesign the operation of its structural adjustment programmes in Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We and other aid donors are involved in a continuing dialogue with World bank staff, both in the board and informally, and with representatives of developing countries, about the approach to be taken to structural adjustment. All parties agree that the essential aim is sustainable, broad-based development. The approach taken continues to evolve in the light of experience.

HEALTH

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider holding centrally information on health authorities which place limitations on extra-contractual referrals.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The management of the extra-contractual referral process is the responsibility of district health authorities as agreed with regional health authorities. The majority of ECR requests are approved, as the grounds on which an ECR can be refused are very limited and purchasers are expected to respect the referring clinician's judgment. It would not be appropriate to collect this information centrally.

NHS (Equal Opportunities)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require national health service trusts and health authorities to carry out equal opportunities monitoring of job applications and to publish the results.

Dr. Mawhinney: National health service trusts and health authorities are expected to have an equal opportunities policy, together with mechanisms for monitoring its implementation. They are specifically expected, by the end of 1994, to monitor applicants for medical interviews on the basis of race, gender and speciality. They are also expected to monitor the selection and interview processes for nurse managers as part of "Opportunity 2000".

In addition, we have set up a working group on ethnic minority employment in the NHS which will consider, among other issues, advice on good practice in recruitment and selection.

AZT

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many yellow card reports of adverse reactions to AZT have been made by doctors dispensing and prescribing the drug.

Dr. Mawhinney: Eighty-three. A report of a suspected reaction in association with a drug does not necessarily mean that the drug caused the effect reported.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library all the research data and compiled statistics on adverse reactions and side effects of AZT; if she will list these adverse reactions and side effects; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Research data on the adverse effects of AZT submitted to the Medicines Control Agency in support of the product licence applications is confidential under section 118 of the Medicines Act, 1968. Information on the adverse effects of AZT is available in standard reference books and medical and scientific publications in the public domain. Information is also given in the data sheet for the product, produced by the manufacturer and authorised by the licensing authority, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

The most serious adverse reactions associated with AZT are disorders affecting the blood including anaemia and neutropenia. Other adverse effects reported include nausea, anorexia, abdominal pain, headache, rash, fever, muscle pain, insomnia and malaise.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the national health service, including the salaries of doctors, the use of other ancillary drug treatments, beds and administration, of the Concorde trials.

Dr. Mawhinney: The costs of the Concorde trial were met by the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will place in the Library the research data which compares mortality rates between those AIDS patients given AZT and those AIDS patients not given AZT; and if she will publish full details of mortality rates for both the AZT group and the placebo control group during the Concorde trials;

(2) what assessment she has made of the development of cancers in the trial subjects who took AZT for the duration of the Concorde trial;

(3) what assessment her Department has made of the numbers and characteristics of patients who (a) suffered adverse reactions to AZT during the Concorde trial and (b) had to cease taking the drug because of the severity of the adverse reactions.

Dr. Mawhinney: Preliminary results of the Concorde trial involving AZT were published in a letter in the Lancet on 3 April. We are still awaiting the full report of the trial which has not yet been analysed by the investigators. As soon as the full report and raw data are received, these will be carefully analysed by the Department and the Medicines Control Agency. Advice on the licensing implications will be sought from the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much time was spent in deliberations by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines to decide whether to license AZT; if she will list the names of members of the particular committee who were to present at specific hearings on the licensing of AZT; and if she will place in the Library the minutes of these meetings.

Dr. Mawhinney: AZT was licensed in 1987 by the Licensing Authority following full consideration by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and its sub-committees. The advice of the CSM has also been sought for subsequent variations to the original licence. The deliberations of the CSM are confidential and records are not kept of how much time the CSM or its sub-committees spend on any particular item on their agendas.

A list of members of the CSM and its sub-committees for 1987 is published in the CSM's annual report, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the ongoing studies in Britain using AZT on asymptomatic subjects, and of research studies into AZT conducted since 1988, which have been notified to her Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: Three trials organised by the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, have involved asymptomatic patients using AZT:

Concorde—comparing immediate treatment with AZT to deferred treatment once symptoms have developed.

Delta—comparing AZT monotherapy with combination therapy using AZT and dideoxyinosine (ddI) or dideoxycytidine (ddC) in patients with CD4 counts between 350 and 50 per cumm. A minority of the patients in this trial will be asymptomatic. This trial is ongoing.

Pental—evaluating the early use of AZT in asymptomatic children with HIV infection born to HIV antibody-positive mothers. This trial is ongoing.

All three are international multicentre trials.

There is no requirement to notify the Department centrally of ongoing clinical trials funded from other sources.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions of AZT were issued to asymptomatic individuals in each month since April 1988.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will review the complaint made in 1992 by the film company Meditel to the Medicines Control Agency, relating to advertising claims by the Wellcome Foundation in relation to AZT;

(2) what action was taken by the Medicines Control Agency and her Department in respect of the complaint made by Meditel in 1992 against the Wellcome Foundation; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Medicines Control Agency examined the complaint and reviewed promotional material for AZT at the time. Action was not taken against the Wellcome Foundation. There is no reason to review the complaint now.

Cannabis

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will commission research into the effects, consequences and benefits of the medical use of cannabis as a muscle relaxant and treatment for nausea.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to commission such research.

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a list and description, together with the source, of all the non-pharmaceutical forms of treatment for HIV and AIDS upon which there has been correspondence with her Department since 1987; what encouragement she has given to the testing of non-pharmaceutical regimes in the cases of asymptomatic antibody positive subjects; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available.

The clinical trials supported as part of the Government's commitment to HIV and AIDS research are organised by the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC has convened an AIDS therapeutic trials committee, which includes patient representatives, to formulate a strategy for clinical trials.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much her Department has spent since 1987 on treatments for HIV management, AIDS and AIDS management, manufactured by companies other than the Wellcome Foundation; and if she will list those companies and the products used.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available. The Department allocates money to health authorities to purchase services for people with HIV/AIDS. These allocations cover the costs of prescribing a range of drug treatments, but it is for individual clinicians to determine what treatment is appropriate for each patient.

Vaccines

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the adequacy of levels of supply to the Greater Manchester area of the MMR and meningitis vaccines; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health is aware that there is presently some shortfall in the availability of measles, mumps and rubella vaccine due to an interruption to supply between 19 April and 7 May, caused by a change from the company which packages the vaccine for distribution in the United Kingdom. The Department wrote to all district immunisation co-ordinators early in April advising them of this interruption and advising that further substantial quantities would become available immediately after 7 May. This vaccine is now being made available to health authorities and any shortfalls will be made good.

There is no shortage of the haemophilus influenzae b (Hib) vaccine; all orders for the vaccine placed this year have been met in full and large stocks are available for requisition.

Suicides

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many suicides recorded in England and Wales in the past five years have been attributed to causes related to suffering from low frequency tinnitus and hum; and how many patients are currently receiving therapy for the conditions through the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health has no information on the reasons for individual people's suicides. A diagnosis of tinnitus was recorded against an estimated 500 patient episodes of treatment in the hospital episode system in England during 1989-90, the latest year for which figures are available. The ninth edition of the international classification of diseases, on which the 1989-90 data are coded, does not distinguish between low frequency and other varieties of tinnitus.

Children in Care

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have run away while in care in children's homes in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will list the relevant local authorities.

Mr. Yeo: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Secure Units

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she is undertaking into the provision of secure units by the private sector.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 2 March that she planned to amend regulations to enable the private and voluntary sectors to provide secure accommodation. We propose to issue a consultation document shortly setting out options for taking this work forward.

General Practitioners

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give a breakdown for the most recently available year of the numbers of general practitioners distinguishing between (a) female and male and (b) part-time and full-time general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

	Full-time	Three-quarter time	Half-time	Job-share	Total
Male	18,694	235	173	134	19,236
Female	5,112	904	395	321	6,732
Total	23,806	1,139	568	455	25,968

Figures refer to general practitioners in England at 1 October 1992.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners there were in Greater London in (a) October 1978, (b) October 1983, (c) October 1988 and (d) at the latest convenient date.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 1 October 1978 there were 3,509 general medical practitioners in Greater London. The corresponding figures at 1 October 1983, 1 October 1988 and 1 October 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, were 3,659, 3,843 and 3,810.

Eye Tests

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to provide free NHS eye tests to all deaf and hard of hearing people; and if she will make it her policy to subsidise the cost of glasses for this group of people.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to extend the rules of entitlement to free national health service sight tests and to vouchers to cover the costs of glasses to this group.

Nursing and Midwifery

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account she took, in her decision to relocate the English National Board of Nursing and Midwifery from Sheffield to London, of the 1989 review by Peat Marwick McLintock, particularly the recommendations contained in pages 91 and 95; if she will re-examine her decision; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The English National Board for Nursing Midwifery and Health Visiting has not made a decision on relocation from Sheffield to London.

Junior Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in reducing the hours of junior hospital doctors and dentists; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Preliminary analysis of regional task force returns indicates that, at 1 April, the number of junior doctors and dentists contracted for more than 83 hours a week had fallen very substantially since September 1990. I hope to announce detailed results shortly.

Mr. Mohammed Saeed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a copy of her Departmental inquiry, into the case of Mohammed Saeed, or the main recommendations thereof.

Mr. Sackville: I shall be writing to the hon. Member shortly about the circumstances of the case in response to his letter of 5 May to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. A copy of my reply will be placed in the Library.

Pharmacies

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many pharmacies dispensed less than (a) 1,000 prescriptions per month and (b) 2,000 prescriptions per month in each of the family health services authority areas in England and Wales in the latest period for which figures are available; and how many of these were classified as essential pharmacies.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is shown in the table and was derived from the Chemists Particulars 1991-92 provided by the Prescription Pricing Authority.

Imigran

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount spent by the NHS on prescription of the drug Imigran in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; and what was the average cost of a single prescription.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on individual national health service prescribed drugs is not provided for reasons of confidentiality.

NHS Salaries

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage the wages of (a) nurses and midwives, (b) ancillary staff and (c) administration and management staff in the national health service were as a portion of total revenue spending for the years 1979 to 1992 inclusive.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 April 1993]: Percentage figures for hospital and community health services in England for the years requested are shown in table 1. Those for 1991-92 are provisional.

While total HCHS salaries and wages costs for 1991-92 increased on 1990-91, they represent a reduced proportion of the total HCHS revenue expenditure incurred by health authorities in that year. Table 2 shows the cost of the staff groups requested as percentages of the total annual HCHS salaries and wages costs. The figures for 1991-92 are provisional.

Annual accounts (1982-83 to 1990-91) and financial returns (1991-92) of regional and district health authorities in England and those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals. Annual accounts of area health and other predecessor authorities (1979-80 to 1981-82). Annual fiscal returns of the first wave NHS trusts (1991-92).

Notes to the tables

1. HCHS salaries and wages costs cover those incurred within the total expenditure of the health authorities (and the NHS trusts) including the management and provision of hospital, community health, patient transport (ie ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.
2. The figure for total: HCHS revenue expenditure used for 1991-92 is not comparable with earlier years as it shows health authorities primarily as purchasers rather than providers of health care and includes charges for the use of capital assets. The total expenditure of NHS trusts was excluded as this is reflected in the health authorities total expenditure through health care and related services purchased.
3. General and senior managers comprises a separate pay category which was established until 1986. Its adoption throughout the NHS occurred over a period of some years and its numbers include many employees re-classified from other pay groups including senior nursing staff.
4. The figures for "all other staff" included medical, dental, ambulance, maintenance and professional and technical staff together with the total costs of all categories of non-NHS (agency, etc) staff. The figures for some financial years may not add across exactly because of roundings.
5. The tables exclude salaries and wages costs incurred by family health services authorities and special health authorities providing central services to the NHS. However, the figures for administrative and clerical staff for the years prior to 1985-86 cover those staff employed by family practitioners committees whose costs were included with those of area health authorities and were not separately identified.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Citylink (Takeover)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what consideration is being given to the competition implications of the takeover of Citylink by National Express;

(2) if he will refer the takeover of Citylink by National Express to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading is currently making inquiries into this merger. If he considers that it may qualify for investigation under section 64 of the Fair Trading Act 1973, he will advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade accordingly. My right hon. Friend shall decide whether or not to make a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission once he has received the Director General's advice.

Textiles

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to the South Korean Government concerning import tariffs on British textiles.

Mr. Needham: I expressed the Government's strong concern about proposed increases in import tariffs on textiles when I met Korean Ministers during my recent visit to Korea.

Serb-based Holiday Companies

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many Serb-based holiday companies trading in London are being investigated by his Department.

Mr. Needham: There are 36 companies in the United Kingdom which are "persons connected with Serbia and Montenegro" for the purposes of United Kingdom sanctions legislation; one of these is a holiday company. My officials have been in touch with them a number of times to ensure they are aware of the impact United Kingdom sanctions may have on them.

Indonesia

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current levels of exports to Indonesia; what they have been over the last five years; what are the current levels of imports from Indonesia; and what have they been over the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Information on the topic is regularly published in Business Monitors MM20 and MA20, "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", copies of which are available in the Library.

Pensions and Benefits

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken to assess the effect on sub-post offices of the plans to encourage payment of pensions and benefits through banks and building societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The option to have pensions and child benefit paid into a suitable bank or building society account has been available for a number of years, and will be extended to a range of other benefits in line with the commitment in the citizens charter. My Department considered with Post Office Counters Ltd. last autumn the likely impact that encouragement of this method of payment might have on the sub-office network and concluded that it would not have a significant effect on total business.

Coal Privatisation

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of asset proceeds from the privatisation of British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is currently considering the possible option for the privatisation of British Coal. It would be premature to estimate the proceeds of privatisation at this stage.

"The Prospects for Coal"

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to publish his first annual energy report as outlined in "The Prospects for Coal."

Mr. Eggar: The first report will be published as soon as possible after the end of the year.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the energy advisory panel of independent experts as outlined in "The Prospects for Coal" will meet; if he will name the members of the panel and outline the panel's terms of reference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I shall make an announcement in due course.

Terrorism Damage (Reinsurance)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make available details of the arrangements under which the Government will undertake the reinsurance of risks relating to damage caused by terrorism.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Yes. An explanatory summary of the arrangements envisaged, describing the essential features of the agreement to be entered into, was placed in the Library of the House and copies made available in the Vote Office this morning.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Darling: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many bids were received in respect of the 14th round of oil and gas licences applications; and of these how many are subject to contracts between the operator and his Department.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 May 1993]: A total of 97 applications were received in respect of blocks offered in the 14th offshore oil and gas licensing round. Licences have been awarded for three of these applications. Work obligations were attached to all of these licences. Other awards under the 14th round are expected to be announced at the end of this month.

Post Office Review

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) whether the continuation of the period of advice by his appointed advisers on the Post Office review into the 1993-94 financial year required the extension or renewal of their contracts;

(2) whether his advisers on the Post Office review were appointed after a process of competitive tendering.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Yes.

VAT

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning irrecoverable VAT paid by charities for goods and services.

Sir John Cope: There are already a number of VAT reliefs on specific goods and services which are worth some £150 million a year to charities. The Government believe that the best way to help charities through the tax system is by measures to encourage charitable giving rather than by refunding VAT on general goods and services. The amount individuals and companies donate is a better measure of the worth of charities than what they spend on standard rated goods and services.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has held with charities on the effect of charging VAT on domestic fuel and power on charities.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 7 May 1993]: I have received a number of representations from charities on this issue and met the Charities Tax Reform Group on 6 May 1993.

British Telecom

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision will be made in the prospectus for the British Telecom share sale for a statement (a) as to BT foreign investment strategy and (b) on how redundancies will be funded.

Mr. Dorrell: The prospectus for the Government's BT3 share sale will contain all material information about BT's business and its financial position at the time of publication.

Petroleum Revenue Tax

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue from (a) corporation tax and (b) petroleum revenue tax from oil and gas fields in each year from 1983 to 1992-93.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Revenues raised from United Kingdom oil and gas production by corporation tax and petroleum revenue tax are as follows:

£ million

Year	[1] Corporation tax	Petroleum revenue tax
1983-84	877	6,017
1984-85	2,432	7,177
1985-86	2,916	6,375
1986-87	2,676	1,188
1987-88	1,318	2,296
1988-89	1,230	1,371
1989-90	743	1,050
1990-91	971	860
1991-92	647	−216
1992-93	670	54

[1] Before ACT set-off.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of oil fields which were subject to the payment of petroleum revenue tax in each year from 1983 to 1992-93 as compared to the total number of oil fields in production during the same period.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The numbers of oil and gas fields with a liability to petroleum revenue tax and the total number of fields in production since 1984 have been as follows:

	Number of fields with PRT liability	Number of fields in production
1984	15	35
1985	16	42
1986	17	49
1987	17	55
1988	15	62
1989	16	72
1990	20	81
1991	20	82
1992	17	94

The information on fields with liabilities is not available for 1983, when 32 fields were in production.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the number of oil fields that would be subject to the payment of petroleum revenue tax in each year between 1993-94 and 1997-98.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The number of oil and gas fields with a liability to petroleum revenue tax in 1993 is estimated to be approximately 20. Forecasts are not made for future years.

Alcohol

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action has been taken against the individuals discovered abusing the indicative levels for alcohol by trying to commercialise their purchases.

Sir John Cope: During the quarter ending 31 March, there were 230 detections of tobacco and alcohol illegally offered or intended for sale in the United Kingdom. The following action has been taken:

Action	Number of Cases
Arrest and charge	11
Reported for prosecution or compounding	116
Seizures of goods only	103

Thirty-four vehicles were also seized. All detections have been included even where the quantities involved were less than the indicative levels, which are only a guide. Separate figures to exclude those cases involving tobacco goods only are not readily available.

Ring-fenced Revenue Accounts

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to treat investment from ring-fenced revenue accounts financed from local resources as outside the remit of the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Portillo: No. By definition the public sector borrowing requirement measures borrowing by the whole of the public sector, including local authorities.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to improve Britain's balance of trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 May 1993]: The Government can best assist traders by keeping inflation low. Inflation rates this year are the lowest for over 25 years. Interest rates are the lowest in the European Community.

In his Budget my right hon. Friend the Chancellor further improved the assistance available to exporters from the ECGD by cutting premiums for 1993-94 by 7½ per cent. on 1992-93 levels; increasing cover in high exposure markets by £1,300 million over the next three years; and by relaxing restrictions for export credits on some high growth markets.

PRIME MINISTER

Policy Unit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the committees and review groups on which members of his policy unit currently sit, or have sat since he took office, giving in each case the purpose of the committee or group and the name of the policy unit member.

The Prime Minister: Members of the policy unit attend a wide range of committees as required.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the names of, and posts held by, members of his policy unit; and if he will give their biographical details.

The Prime Minister: The members of my policy unit are as follows:

Head of Unit
Sarah Hogg

Deputy Head of Unit
Nick True

Damian Green

Dominic Morris

Lucy Neville-Rolfe

David Poole

Katharine Ramsay

Alan Rosling

Jill Rutter

It is not my practice to provide biographical details.

Russia (Nuclear Safety)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss British-Russian co-operation on nuclear safety with President Yeltsin; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to meet with President Yeltsin specifically to discuss nuclear safety issues. However, if the opportunity arises, I will emphasise our concern about nuclear safety in Russia and our wish for continuing co-operation in this area.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the projects, and the funding committed thereto, by the European Community and the United Kingdom to assist Russia; Belarus, Ukraine and Kazakhstan in respect of the storage and disarmament of nuclear material and facilities.

The Prime Minister: The Government have made a commitment to supply Russia with nuclear weapons transport vehicles and special containers to help with the dismantlement of that country's surplus nuclear warheads; the total programme is expected to cost over £30 million. We have no such programmes of assistance for Belarussia, Ukraine or Kazakhstan. The European Community has not committed funding to any of these states for this purpose.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 11 May.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 11 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Unitary Taxation

Mr. Turner: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has received from President Clinton to his letter about unitary taxation and the Barclays bank litigation; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 May 1993]: President Clinton and his colleagues have made it clear to us that the United States Administration fully recognise the importance that the Government attach to this issue, the strength of feeling in the United Kingdom and the risk of retaliatory action by the United Kingdom if a satisfactory solution is not forthcoming. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor reinforced these points in recent discussions with Secretary Bentsen and others in the United States Administration. They have assured us that they are very keen to find a solution to this problem that is acceptable.

EDUCATION

Nursery Education

5. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to increase the account taken in standard spending assessments of nursery education.

Mr. Forth: At national level, local authority grant settlements have reflected the general increase over the years in the number of under-fives in school. The under-fives element of each authority's SSA is based on the number of three and four-year-olds resident in the authority. It is for each authority to decide how to allocate resources between its various services, including under-fives education which authorities provide under discretionary powers.

Grant-maintained Schools

14. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many children are currently being educated in local education authority or grant-maintained selective schools in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Approximately 105,000 children are currently being educated in local authority grammar schools or grant-maintained grammar schools in England.

School Buildings, Liverpool

15. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assistance he has given to local authorities to meet the cost of refurbishment of the older school buildings in Liverpool.

Mr. Boswell: Capital support for maintained schools in the area of Liverpool local education authority, including voluntary aided and special agreement schools, amounts to over £8 million in 1993-94.

Teaching (European Dimension)

16. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the procedures to be followed in adjusting secondary school teaching to have a more European dimension.

Mr. Boswell: There are no specific procedures. The content of teaching and the organisation of education systems are and will remain the responsibility of the individual member states within the European Community.

Education Quality

17. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he next plans to meet organisations representing parents to discuss improving the quality of education.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend met the National Confederation of Parent Teacher Associations, which is said to represent the views of some 7·5 million parents, on Monday 26 April. At that meeting, I am pleased to say, the NCPTA confirmed their support in principle for the national curriculum together with its associated testing arrangements. He also met a delegation from Parents' Initiative a few weeks ago and gave a speech at the annual conference of the Campaign for Real Education on April 17. All these occasions allowed him to speak with parents and to seek their views on issues.

Parental Choice

18. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to make parental choice in education easier to exercise.

Mr. Forth: The policy of more open enrolment has increased parental choice by requiring maintained schools to admit up to their physical capacity. All parents now have the right to say which school they prefer their children to attend. The Government are continuing their drive to make more information about schools publicly available. This will enhance choice by helping parents to make wise decisions about their children's education.

Testing

19. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he next plans to meet organisations representing teachers to discuss testing.

Mr. Forth: On the subject of testing, teachers have been invited to make their views known to Sir Ron Dearing, the chairman-designate of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, who is conducting a review of the national curriculum and assessment.

21. Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received recently on the implementation of testing in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Since the beginning of the year the Department has received around 6,500 letters from teachers, parents, governors and others about testing in schools. In addition, my right hon. Friend has met parents, teachers in staff-rooms, governors and organisations at conferences. He has met national representatives of the teachers' associations on 19 occasions and delegations from all six teacher unions. He has also visited 37 schools since he took office in April 1992.

22. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to overcome problems in the testing of school pupils; and what assessment he has made of the relative effectiveness of United Kingdom testing and methods existing in other countries.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has asked Sir Ron Dearing to conduct a wide-ranging review of the manageability of the national curriculum and the associated testing and assessment framework. A great deal of information is already available about testing in other countries, including a recent report from the National Institute for Economic and Social Research which found that the higher standards achieved by pupils in the middle to lower ability range in France, Germany and Japan was attributable to the existence in these countries of long-standing national curricula reinforced by regular assessment and reporting.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to use the power to surcharge under the Local Government Finance Act 1982 to ensure that governors and teachers implement testing in schools.

Mr. Forth: Sections 19 and 20 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 set out the power to seek restitution from those concerned where public funds have been spent improperly or have not been properly accounted for. Action under these sections falls to the auditor appointed under the Act.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what study he has made of testing of pupils in other countries.

Mr. Forth: A great deal of information is available, from Ofsted and other sources, about testing arrangements in other countries. It shows that tests are well-established in most of our main competitor countries. For example:

—The findings of the HMI report on "Aspects of Primary Education in France" in 1991 indicated that the French National Curriculum has long stressed the importance of basic literacy and numeracy for primary schools and that pupils' attainments in reading, writing and mathematics were assesed at the ages of 8 and 11 entirely through paper and pencil tests;

—a report published earlier this year by the National Institute of Economic and Social Research found that the higher standards achieved by pupils in the middle to lower ability range in France, Germany and Japan were mainly attributable to the existence of long-standing national curricula in these countries, "reinforced through regular assessment and reporting".

Illiteracy

20. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his current estimate of the number of adults in England and Wales who may be defined as functionally illiterate.

Mr. Boswell: The Adult Literacy and Basic Skills Unit, which advises the Government, estimates that 4 million adults in England and Wales have real difficulty with everyday tasks involving reading, writing and spelling and that a further 1·5 million have difficulty with numerical skills. Such people are often described as being "functionally illiterate".

National Curriculum

23. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what further plans he has to meet organisations representing teachers to discuss the implementation of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: None. Teacher associations should make their views known to Sir Ron Dearing, the chairman-designate of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, who is conducting a review of the national curriculum and assessment.

28. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he next expects to meet representatives of the Professional Association of Teachers to discuss the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting. The Professional Association of Teachers has been invited to make its views known to Sir Ron Dearing, the chairman designate of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, who is conducting a review of the national curriculum and assessment.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to hold further discussions with parent governors and teachers on the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: All interested parties should make their views known to Sir Ron Dearing, the chairman-designate of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, who is conducting a review of the national curriculum and assessment.

Vocational Education

24. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on vocational education.

Mr. Boswell: Vocational education is of key importance to achieving the national education and training targets, and hence ensuring a proficient and competitive work force. From next September the new general national vocational qualifications will be widely available and will provide a third pathway to qualification, alongside NVQs and A-levels. We want GNVQs in at least two subjects to be available in more than 1,500 schools and colleages and one in four 16-year-olds starting GNVQ courses by 1996. In the longer term I hope that around half our 16 and 17-year-olds will take these important new qualifications.

Teachers (Workload)

25. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to reduce the workload of middle-school teachers in the current year.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has frequently placed on record his appreciation of the commitment shown by teachers in implementing the Government's reforms. It is in response to the concern of some teachers that the incremental growth of the national curriculum over several years has led to over-elaboration that my right hon. Friend has asked Sir Ron Dearing to review the curriculum and assessment framework.

English

26. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions he has had with employers regarding the need for 16-year-olds with a competent command of English.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend has had no formal discussions recently, but he has noted the concerns of employers about basic literacy and numeracy standards identified in recent reports by the Adult Literacy and Basic Skills Unit. He is well aware how important it is to employers—and to our ability to compete as a nation—that school and college leavers joining the work force should be fully competent in their use of the English language.

This Government are determined to ensure that all school pupils learn to communicate effectively in spoken and written English. That is why our proposals to revise the requirements for national curriculum English were announced last month. The aim is to streamline and strengthen the present curriculum by defining clearly the essential skills which English teaching should promote.

The National Curriculum Council is now conducting the statutory consultation on those proposals, which will give all parties the opportunity to offer their views. Copies of the proposals will be sent by the NCC to the CBI and other employers' organisations.

Grant-maintained Schools

27. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will visit Hendon grant-maintained school to discuss grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has not received an invitation to visit Hendon school. If he receives such an invitation, he would be very happy to consider it.

Disruptive Pupils

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to provide additional resources for schools to enable them to provide for disruptive pupils who may otherwise be expelled.

Mr. Forth: Under the "Reducing Truancy" category of the Government's grants for education support and training scheme for 1993-1994, local education authorities could bid for support to enhance the provision made for their most difficult pupils. A number of the approved projects include such a component.

Teacher Morale

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to improve teacher morale.

Mr. Boswell: The Government recognise the need to maintain teacher morale and are committed to ensuring that teaching is viewed as an attractive profession. Current recruitment is buoyant; vacancies are low; fewer than 1 per cent. leave the profession each year for paid employment outside education. The restructuring of teachers' pay in the coming September will give classroom teachers the prospect of earning up to £30,441 a year.

Teachers (Administration)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals he has to reduce the administrative burden on teachers to enable them to spend more time teaching.

Mr. Boswell: While the Department wishes teachers to use their time effectively, the division of teachers' directed time between teaching and other duties is a matter for determination at school level.

School Hours

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from (a) parent governors and (b) teachers regarding the length of the school day or week.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received written representations about the length of the school day from 14 parents, two governors and three teachers in the past 12 months. Letters received from governors and teachers have generally been concerned with the procedures required to change the length of the school day; and letters from parents with the desirability of a longer school day.

Education Reform

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the national curriculum, testing in schools and the workload of teachers.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has asked Sir Ron Dearing to conduct a wide-ranging review of the manageability of the national curriculum and the associated testing and assessment framework. The review will consider the need for slimming down the curriculum and for simplifying the testing arrangements. The aim is that early results from the review will inform the testing arrangements in 1994.

Mandatory Awards

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what support will be given in mandatory awards to students in the academic year 1993-94.

Mr. Boswell: We propose the following increases in support for mandatory award holders from England and Wales, subject to parliamentary approval of the regulations to be laid in due course. Taken together with the increased rates of student loans which I announced on Friday 7 May, Official Report, col. 254-55, they will enable the average student support to rise by 2·75 per cent. in the academic year 1993-94, thereby maintaining its value in real terms. We will increase the supplementary allowances payable as part of the mandatory award by 2·75 per cent. We will also adjust the parental and spouse contribution scales so that the assessed contribution from a parent or spouse whose residual income rises in line with average earnings will continue to fall in real terms. The main rates of maintenance grant will be held at 1992-93 levels.

I am placing in the Library details of the rates of grant, the supplementary allowances and the parental and spouse contribution rules.

SCOTLAND

GP Fund Holders

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will describe the financial policies by which non-fund-holding practices obtain or employ (a) drugs, medicines and listed appliances, (b) goods and services, (c) services carried out by a member of the practice such as those listed in schedule 3 to S.I. 1993 No. 488 (S.53), (d) employees of members of the practice employed to provide treatment or manage/administer the practice and (e) purchase of materials, equipment, or improvement of the premises.

Mr. Stewart: The costs incurred by non-fund-holding practices under these headings are met by the health board either from within their financial allocations or in the case of drugs, medicines and listed appliances by drawing on NHS resources held centrally.

Those services listed in schedule 3 to S.I. No. 488 (S.53) cannot be carried out by a member of a non-fund-holding practice, but instead may be obtained by referral to a provider unit with the costs being met by the health board.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to ensure that non-fund-holding practices will be able to offer services in every respect equal to those that become fund-holding practices.

Mr. Stewart: All the patient care services currently included within the scope of the GP fund-holding scheme are also available to non-fund-holding practices. GP fund holders have the flexibility to use their fund to provide these services or purchase them from other providers for the benefit of their patients. The Government's framework for the GP fund-holding scheme seeks to maintain a proper balance between providing GP fund holders with an appropriate degree of flexibility in the use of their fund and preserving the principle of equity of access to health care for all NHS patients. GP fund holders, in providing care themselves or in setting contracts with other providers, will be able to develop improved standards in the quality of care for their patients provided as a consequence they do not directly disadvantage NHS patients from other practices.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the average outturn surplus at the end of the first year of operation of fund-holding practices.

Mr. Stewart: During 1991-92, their first operational year, GP fund holders in Scotland by careful management of their funds achieved average savings, following audit, of around 4 per cent. A proportion of these savings was returned to the health boards, leaving fund-holder practices with total savings of £190,000. These savings may only be applied in accordance with regulations, and with health board agreement, for the benefit of the fund-holders' patients and do not represent income for the GPs and practices involved.

Nicotine Replacement Patches

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when nicotine replacement patches will be available on NHS prescriptions in Scotland; and for what reasons they are not yet available on prescription through the NHS.

Mr. Stewart: Only one nicotine patch has been prohibited from NHS prescription on the expert advice of the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances. The committee advised that the manufacturer had failed to demonstrate to it that nicotine patches had a significant therapeutic use in general medical practice in helping patients to stop smoking. Other, more recently introduced patches which have yet to be considered by the committee remain prescribable meantime but doctors who do so may have their prescribing challenged by their health board.

Nursing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the reasons for inclusion of paragraph (e) of the schedule to S.I. 1993 No. 637 (S.83); and if he will take account of reasons for dismissal other than redundancy which are no reflection on the suitability of a candidate for membership of the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: The power of the Secretary of State to appoint and dismiss members of the board in accordance with the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland Order 1993 (S.I. 1993 No. 637) is an important safeguard in relation to the proper conduct of the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland. The schedule to the order sets out the various circumstances, including dismissal from paid employment other than by reason of redundancy, which disqualifies persons from appointment as members of the board. The Secretary of State does, however, have the power under article 9(3) of the order to waive the disqualification: his exercise of such a power will depend on the facts and circumstances of each individual case.

National Panel of Specialists

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the National Panel of Specialists, and the advisory appointments committee drawn from its membership, will be required to include a proportion of suitably qualified women.

Mr. Stewart: The National Panel of Specialists constituted under the National Health Service (Appointment of Consultants) (Scotland) Regulations 1993 contains a proportion of women consultants which is roughly comparable to the national ratio of female to male consultants in Scotland; the figures are 15·7 per cent. and 16·5 per cent. respectively. All members of the panel must be suitably qualified consultants. The membership of advisory appointments committees appointed by local NHS-employing authorities to consider candidates for consultant appointments in the NHS is also governed by the 1993 regulations. Each committee must include two members of the national panel from the relevant specialty or sub-specialty in which the consultant vacancy has occurred. The appointment of members to individual AACs is a matter for NHS-employing authorities who should ensure that the membership of these committees meets the statutory requirements.

Tenants

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps in the case of any landlords who have collected poll tax from tenants, and who now should collect a lesser sum as council tax, ensure that such tenants are made aware of the reduction they are due.

Mr. Stewart: The Secretary of State has no powers to direct landlords in this way and has no plans to take such powers. There will be very few situations where landlords paid the community charge in respect of a property and where they are now liable to pay council tax. Landlords can decide to recoup the council tax where they are liable, but tenants with assured or short assured tenancies who pay rent weekly are entitled to have details of the council tax element given in their rent book.

Council Tax

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of persons in Scotland he estimates is paying higher levels of council tax than the previous community charge.

Mr. Lang: Using information from the family expenditure survey, it is estimated that about 40 per cent. of households in Scotland face higher bills for council tax in 1993-94 than their combined household community charge bills in 1992-93. This estimate is based on a 0·1 per cent. sample of Scottish households and is therefore subject to sampling error. The estimate takes into account the effects of the community charge reduction scheme in reducing personal community charge bills but makes no allowance for the effect of community charge or council tax benefit.

Maternity Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the hospitals in Scotland which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1991-92 and 1992-93, with the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital in each year.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is shown in the table.

Prisons Inspectorate

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the role of Her Majesty's prisons inspectorate for Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The prisons inspectorate was established in its present form following the publication in 1979 of the report by the committee of inquiry into the United Kingdom prison services which recommended that there should be a systtem of inspection of the prison service distanced as far as might be practicable from the prison departments. Subsequently, the post of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons for Scotland was approved and the inspectorate commenced operations on 1 January 1981.

HMCIP's main statutory responsibility is the regular inspection of individual establishments. In carrying out this function matters which are inspected and reported on include physical conditions, quality of prisoner regimes, morale of staff and prisoners, facilities and amenities available to staff and prisoners, questions of humanity and propriety and the general efficiency and effectiveness of the establishment. Within the Scottish prison service there are 19 separate penal establishments, two of which contain special units, and it is the aim of the inspectorate to carry out a full inspection of each of these establishments once every three and a half years. Each inspection lasts for up to two weeks, depending on the size and complexity of the establishment, following which a detailed report is prepared. In addition, a one-day inspection, which may be unannounced, is undertaken annually at each establishment not being formally inspected.

Other areas of responsibility of HMCIP include the triennial inspection of legalised police cells, which are in locations distant from prisons proper, the undertaking of periodic thematic studies which focus attention on specific areas or aspects of the prison service and the production of an annual report.

The Government's White Paper on the citizens charter set out the role which inspectorates should play and I am satisfied that the prisons inspectorate are applying the key principles of that role.

Independence

HMCIP is appointed by the Crown under section 7 of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 and since the establishment of the present inspectorate in 1981 all three post-holders have been lay appointments, that is, individuals who have had no previous connection with the prison service. I intend to continue to make lay appointments to the post. In undertaking the duties of the post, HMCIP is supported by two senior prison governors who provide professional advice and guidance during the conduct of inspections and the preparation of reports. Although these officers may have future career enhancement within the service which they are inspecting, they will continue to be formally seconded to the inspectorate for the duration of their posting there. The inspectorate team is completed by an administrative civil servant who acts as staff officer.

The inspectorate determines its own programme for the inspection year and submits it to me for approval. During any inspection the inspectors have free access to any part of the establishment or to any individual therein. Reports are prepared without consultation with, or direct contribution from, the Scottish prison service and are submitted directly to me. HMCIP has no direct input to the policy or management of the Scottish prison service although recommendations in reports may have implications for either or both. Whether invited or not, HMCIP may from time to time offer comment on actual or potential developments.

Lay involvement

Lay involvement in the oversight of prisons has been separately provided for, since the last century, by the statutory appointment of visiting committees for each establishment, members of which are statutorily nominated in the case of young offenders institutions by the Secretary of State and in the case of adult prisons by local authorities. These committees act as independent observers on my behalf and have the absolute right to visit the appropriate prison whenever they wish. Their main functions are to pay frequent visits to the prison, to hear any complaints which may be made by the prisoners and to report to me any matter which they consider it expedient to report. As part of every full inspection HMCIP invariably seeks a meeting with representatives of the local visiting committee and records their views on the establishment in the final report.

HMCIP may co-opt additional lay members on to the inspection team to deal with specific issues relating to individual establishments, if necessary.

Openness

The inspectorate has published its annual inspection programme for 1993-94 and will continue to do so for future years. Arrangements are always made to meet groups of prisoners and staff during each full inspection and arrangements are now also being made to give prisoners' visitors an opportunity to meet the inspectors and, alternatively or additionally, to submit comments orally or in writing.

All the inspectorate's reports are submitted directly to me and are published in full, save occasionally as regards parts of reports which HMCIP has indicated should not be published as touching on confidential matters involving security. When published, they are invariably accompanied by my formal response. These arrangements cover not only the reports of the regular inspections of individual establishments but any thematic study reports and in particular HMCIP's annual report, publication of which is statutorily required. It is for HMCIP to decide whether to hold a press conference on the publication of reports and no restrictions are placed on discussions with the media on matters relating to inspections. All the inspectorate's reports are available publicly—a charge now being made only in the case of the annual report.

Resources

HMCIP has no role in the allocation of resources to the Scottish prison service or among individual establishments, except insofar as recommendations may lead to a re-assessment of priorities. While the inspectorate's overriding statutory commitment is to comment on the acceptability of conditions, all reports take into account the need for cost efficiency and effectiveness.

Health (Private Services)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to permit private health care companies or private hospitals to run national health service wards or specialist units; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy on partnership deals with the private sector to run either hospital units or departments within units.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 4 May 1993]: Following my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's statement to the House on 12 November, the Government have been encouraging the participation of private sector interests in the provision of public services. I welcome the utilisation of private finance in the national health service where this would provide improved standards of health care for patients or an opportunity for cost savings to be allocated to other health care projects. It is for individual health bodies to consider specific projects.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the letter of 2 April on Scottish Office guidance on opencast coal production from M. T. Affolter of Scottish Office Environment Department to David Jarman of West Lothian district council.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Arrangements will be made for a copy of the Department's letter to Mr. Jarman to be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

School Transport

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase resources available to education authorities in Scotland to enable more flexible school transport in rural areas.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1993]: It is for local authorities themselves to determine the level of expenditure on school transport in the light of their overall spending priorities and taking into account local needs. In distributing Government support to local authorities through aggregate external finance, account is taken of the differing population settlement patterns in rural areas.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many manufacturing jobs there were in Scotland in December 1979 and December 1992; what was the proportion of manufacturing jobs as a percentage of the total number of jobs in each of those years; and if he will make a statement about the future of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The figures showing the number of manufacturing jobs in Scotland in December 1979 and December 1992, and the proportion of manufacturing jobs as a percentage of the total number of jobs in these years are set out in the table. These are taken from the "Civilian Workforce in Employment Estimates" compiled by the Employment Department.

	December
	1979	1992
Total employees in employment (thousands)	2,094	1,967
Employees in manufacturing (thousands)	596	348
Manufacturing as a percentage of total employers	28·5 per cent.	17·7 per cent.

Despite reductions in Scottish manufacturing employment since 1979, output in this sector has increased. This has been achieved by substantial productivity increases. Future manufacturing success will be determined by the ability of Scotland's producers to compete in domestic and overseas markets.

The Government's objective is to provide an overall economic framework in which Scottish manufacturers can flourish. This strategy is succeeding. The latest business survey evidence reveals that Scottish manufacturing firms expect an increase in total new orders, the volume of output and exported goods in forthcoming months.

Appointments

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for Highlands and Islands Enterprise and Scottish Enterprise and for each of the local enterprise companies the names of the chairman and board members, their occupations or professions and their allowances, salaries or other remuneration payable.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The names, occupations and current salaries of the chairmen and board members of Scottish Enterprise and of Highlands and Islands Enterprise are as follows:

Executive members are employees of health boards and receive no additional remuneration for board membership. In addition to the remuneration indicated above, non-executive members are entitled to claim travelling and subsistence allowances at rates set for members of public bodies.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the public bodies for which he is responsible, (b) their overall expenditure in 1992-93 for the most recent year for which figures are available, (c) the total number of people appointed to these bodies, (d) the number of males and females and (e) the total sum paid in allowances or salaries or other types of remuneration.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 May 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1992" which was published on 29 January 1993 and a copy of which is available in the Library. This publication includes information on expenditure, membership and remuneration for the bodies for which I am responsible.

NHS Funding

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the criteria used to assess whether or not a service should receive NHS funding.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Section 1 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 provides that it shall continue to be the duty of the Secretary of State to promote in Scotland a comprehensive and integrated health service designed to secure improvement in the physical and mental health of the people of Scotland, and the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of illness. Within that framework health boards are responsible for assessing the health needs of the population in their areas and for determining their own priorities for purchasing or providing services to meet these needs from the general resources allocated to them. Central funding is now authorised only where it is necessary to facilitate the introduction and orderly provision and development of new high-cost, low-throughput priority services with good success rates, such as heart or liver transplantation.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Whaling

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals are being put forward by Her Majesty's Government to the 45th meeting of the International Whaling Commission in Kyoto, Japan from 10 to 14 May; and what are his objectives for the meeting.

Mr. Curry: The Government's primary objective is to secure a continuation of the present international moratorium on commercial whaling. We have made it very clear that we cannot even contemplate the lifting of the present moratorium until we are satisfied about the state of stocks; have full agreement on effective measures for their management, including a transparent and rigorous means for enforcement and inspection; and have humane methods of killing whales.

At the IWC meeting, we shall be looking for positive responses to the United Kingdom resolutions, adopted at last year's meeting, on an 11-point action plan for future work on humane killing and on the concerns we highlighted relating to the Faroese pilot whaling drive fishery. We will be pressing for progress on considering the French proposal for an Antarctic whale sanctuary and on pursuing the United Kingdom resolution, adopted last year, on environmental threats to whales in the Antarctic and elsewhere. We shall continue to oppose "scientific" whaling that fails to meet two important pre-conditions: the IWC must be satisfied that the stocks of whales involved are in good condition and that the research is essential in providing information which cannot be obtained by non-lethal means. We aim to pursue improved protection, under IWC auspices, for small cetaceans. And we are producing a paper for discussion at the meeting that seeks IWC support for our proposals to encourage the growth and proper regulation of whale watching as a non-lethal and non-damaging means of exploiting whale resources.

Minimum Sugar Requirement

Mr. Faber: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Government intend to abolish the minimum sugar requirement; and whether they intend to introduce a maximum caffeine limit in soft drinks.

Mr. Soames: The Government have today laid before Parliament regulations revoking the requirement in the Soft Drinks Regulations 1964 and the parallel regulations in Scotland, for a minimum amount of sugar to be added during the manufacture of soft drinks. Given current dietary advice on reducing sugar intake, it is clearly sensible to remove this statutory limit. It is also a step in the direction of deregulation, in that it would leave manufacturers free to decide themselves whether or not sugar should be added during the manufacture of soft drinks. We are looking at the remainder of the regulations as part of the Government's deregulation exercise.

We have decided, at this stage, not to introduce a maximum caffeine limit for soft drinks. I have asked the Food Advisory Committee to review its 1988 recommendation about the need for such a limit, as there appears to have been no reported adverse affects on young children following the introduction of high-caffeine soft drinks. Also, any restriction would have only a limited effect as it could not apply to soft drinks manufactured and imported from other EC member states. I want to be sure that there is a real need for any limit before proceeding in this direction.

Athrawon Bro Teachers

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement outlining the effect of the proposed unitary authorities in Wales upon the deployment of Athrawon Bro teachers.

Mr. David Hunt: Responsibility for the development of teams of mobile teachers or expert advisers concerned with teaching Welsh as a second language in junior schools would be a matter for the new authorities. It would thus be for the shadow authorities to consider and set out their proposals for such teachers in their service delivery plans.

Maternity Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wales which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1991-92 and 1992-93, with the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital in each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information for 1991-92 is given in the following table. Information for 1992-93 is not yet available.

Wales Council for the Disabled

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met officials from the Wales Council for the Disabled; what was discussed; and when he next expects to meet the council.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have not yet met Wales Council for the Disabled, but my officials have very close contact with the organisation, which receives substantial support from the Welsh Office—for example, grant aid of £315,000 in 1992-93.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary was invited to meet the staff side officers of the Joint Staff Consultative Council for the Welsh health service to discuss industrial relations in some NHS trusts; what was his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A meeting was proposed in a letter dated 6 April. NHS trusts have operational freedom to manage their own affairs, including the conduct of industrial relations with staff interests. The matters raised should be discussed with the NHS trusts concerned and a meeting with me would not be helpful. My private secretary replied accordingly on 28 April.

Agriculture

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of Welsh gross domestic product is currently provided by Welsh agriculture.

Mr. David Hunt: Provisional figures for 1991 show that agriculture, forestry and fishing accounted for 2·1 per cent. of Welsh gross domestic product.

Doctors' Hours of Work

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Official Report, column 413, over what period of time the maximum average of 83 hours of work per week by junior doctors is calculated; and what consultations he has had with health authorities and NHS trusts as to whether any junior doctor is working, on average, above 83 hours per week in breach of contract.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The average weekly hours of duty for junior doctors is calculated over their normal rostered duty period. Health authorities and NHS trusts have recently been asked to report on the hours of duty of all junior doctors.

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the forms and publications that have been produced by his Department for General publication within the last six months indicating which of these have been produced in the Welsh language or bilingually in Welsh and English.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information in the form requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Aggregates Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received regarding plans by the aggregates industry in Wales to expand their activities.

Mr. David Hunt: In response to my Department's recent public consultation on the draft revision of minerals planning guidance note 6 "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales", comments were received from 20 bodies, including local authority, conservation and industry interests.

Prince of Wales Orthopaedic Hospital

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the south Glamorgan health authority in relation to the closure of St. Fagan's ward at the Prince of Wales orphopaedic hospital, Rhydlafar.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the health authority. I am not aware of any plans to decommission St. Fagan's ward.

Dentists

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether Powys family health services authority has applied to his Department for authority to employ salaried dentists in the Builth Wells area;

(2) what action he is taking to secure the availability of national health service dental treatment for patients in areas of South Powys not covered by dentists in Brecon and Hay-on-Wye.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The responsibility for administering NHS general dental services in South Powys rests with the Powys family health services authority. The authority applied to the Department on 5 May for permission to employ a salaried dentist in Builth Wells and the application is being given urgent and careful consideration. In the meantime, the authority is able to help any patient in its area experiencing difficulty in obtaining NHS dental treatment.

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of dentists in Wales who have informed their local family health services authority that they will no longer treat NHS patients in each of the eight FHSAs since April 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally in the form requested. Fortnightly returns from family health services authorities in Wales indicate that, as a direct result of the new fee scale introduced on 8 July 1992, 29 general dental practitioners gave written notice to have their names removed from FHSA dental lists from 1 August 1992 to 23 April 1993. The figures are as follows, alongside the number of dentists joining the lists in the same period.

FHSA	Number of dentists leaving dental lists as a direct result of new fee scale	Number of dentists joining dental lists
Clwyd	10	11
Dyfed	1	6
Gwent	10	17
Gwynedd	1	5
Mid Glamorgan	7	8
Powys	0	2
South Glamorgan	0	10
Total	29	59

The information given in these fortnightly returns was intended for general managerial purposes and is not statistically validated.

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many salaried dentists posts are currently vacant in Wales;

(2) how many salaried dentists posts he has approved since April 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Approval has been given for Dyfed and Gwynedd family health services authorities to employ a total of six whole-time-equivalent salaried dentists. Both authorities are in the process of identifying suitable applicants and premises.

Mr. Alnger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of independent dentists carrying out NHS work in Wales in April 1992 and April 1993 in each of the eight FHSAs.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information as at 31 March 1992 is given in the following table. Information as at 31 March 1993 is not yet available.

I will write to the hon. Member as soon as figures for 1993 become available.

Cancer Services

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the numbers of cancer registrations in Wales for each of the last five years available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest registration figures for all malignant neoplasms from the Welsh cancer registry are published by the Welsh Office in "Health and Personal Social Services for Wales, No. 19, 1992", available in the Library of the House. These data represent the most reliable published information on cancer registrations.

The following table shows the number of such registrations and the year-on-year percentage difference.

Year	Registration of all malignant neoplasms	Change of previous year per cent.
1984	14,480	+3·2
1985	14,899	+2·9
1986	14,635	−1·8
1987	15,345	+4·9
1988	16,217	+5·7

These statistics make no allowance for changes in the age and sex composition of the population. Cancers are more naturally prevalent among the elderly, who form an increasing proportion in the population. Aside from such demographic considerations, increases in the numbers of cancer registrations may be due to earlier diagnosis, more complete reporting of diagnosed cases to the cancer registry, or a real increase in the incidence of cancer.

Figures are also published by OPCS in its document "Cancer Statistics—Registrations". These differ from those shown in the table. For example, OPCS figures under-record Welsh registrations for 1986 and slightly over-record those for 1987. Differences in the two published sources arise because it has not been possible for OPCS to take on all revisions to the Welsh cancer registry data in time for inclusion in their annual publications. These revisions arise from routine validation and from several substantial data quality improvements made by the Welsh cancer registry staff.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) women and (b) men are in part-time work in Wales; and what proportion of part-time workers are aged between 50 and 65 years.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates from the labour force survey in autumn 1992 show that the numbers of part-time women and men in employment are 258,000 and 48,000 respectively. Of these, 21 per cent. of women and 25 per cent. of men are aged between 50 and 65 years.

Part-time work is defined to be that in which staff are contracted to work basic usual hours of up to 30 hours per week.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) men and (b) women in Wales receive disability living allowance; how many in each case are aged between 50 and 65 years; and what percentage of the total Welsh population receives disability living allowance.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not yet available separately for Wales.

Economically Inactive People

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in each (a) district and (b) county in Wales are economically inactive; and what is the total number of people in Wales who are economically inactive.

Mr. David Hunt: In the 1991 census the definition of economically inactive includes all those retired, permanently sick, students without a job in the week before the census and other inactive.

The information requested is given in the following table:

Training Schemes

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) male and (b) female 16 to 19-year-olds in Wales are on (i) employment training schemes or (ii) youth training schemes; and what is the proportion of 16 to 19-year-olds on those schemes as a percentage of the total Welsh population.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested. A breakdown by male and female participation can be drawn from the 1991 census, which recorded residents who were on Government schemes but did not identify type of scheme. Based upon individual household members' assessments of their employment position there were 7,413 males and 4,250 females aged 16 to 19 on a Government scheme. The total of 11,663 represented 7·7 per cent. of the population of that age.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Allowances

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many residents of Derbyshire are claimants of (a) attendance allowance (i) at higher rate and (ii) at lower rate, (b) disability living allowance (Mobility) (i) at higher rate and (ii) at lower rate, (c) disability living allowance (care) (i) at higher rate, (ii) at middle rate and (iii) at lower rate, (d) disability working allowance and (e) family credit.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits (Automatic Credit Transfer)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list, by parliamentary constituency, the number of recipients of pensions and benefits paid through a (a) sub-post offices, (b) main post offices and (c) automatic credit transfer;

(2) what discussions he has had with representatives of banks and building societies about the transfer of benefits and pensions payments to automatic credit transfer; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how much his Department has budgeted during 1993-94 for research, piloting, changes to form design and to leaflets, and to other information available from the

Benefits Agency seeking to persuade recipients of pensions and benefits to switch to payment by automatic credit transfer; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what discussions he has had with (a) Post Office Counters Ltd. and (b) trade unions representing post office workers about the transfer of benefits and pensions payments to automtic credit transfer; and if he will make a statement;

(5) pursuant to his answer of 26 April, Official Report, column 313, on payment of benefits by automated credit transfer, whether he has estimated how many of the pension and benefit recipients currently paid through sub and main post offices hold bank or building society accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in the uprating statement on 12 November proposals to extend the payment of benefits by automated credit transfer (ACT). Budgets for 1993-94 include £3·5 million to encourage existing customers to select payment by ACT. In 1991 it was estimated that of those paid through the Post Office, 65 per cent. held bank or building society accounts. Details, by parliamentary constituency, of the number of recipients of pensions and benefits paid through sub-post offices, main post offices and ACT are not available.

Officials have held discussions with representatives of banks and building societies regarding technical matters arising from the extension of ACT to other benefits, as announced in the citizens charter. Post Office Counters Ltd. was aware of our proposals to encourage the use of ACT. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has not met representatives of POCL or of post office workers, but he would consider positively any request for such a meeting.

Disabled People

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent representations he has received from the National Federation of Housing Associations regarding plans by the Housing Agency to increase rents for disabled people living in housing association homes.

Mr. Burt: So far as I am aware, the Department has received no representations on this subject.

Regulations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a list of all the regulations for which his Department is currently responsible, with a descriptive title for each individual regulation.

Miss Widdecombe [pursuant to her reply, 8 February 1993, c. 499-500]: "The Law Relating to Child Support" is available in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

83. Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances European Community nationals may count periods of unemployment in which they were in receipt of benefit in another EC country towards the qualifying period of unemployment for eligibility for training for work, learning for work and the community action programme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A person must register with the employment service in this country as unemployed for at least 26 weeks in order to qualify for training for work. Detailed eligibility rules for learning for work and community action have yet to be finalised.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were on the employment training scheme in each month since April 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the following table:

Employment training number in training (Great Britain) April 1992 to March 1993

European Social Affairs Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals were put forward by Her Majesty's Government, and what decisions taken, at the European Social Affairs Council meeting on unemployment, held in Nyborg on 3 and 4 May.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The European meeting held in Nyborg on 3 and 4 May was an informal meeting of EC Employment Ministers, not a Council meeting; I represented the United Kingdom. No decisions are taken at informal meetings of EC Ministers.

There were discussions about employment in the Community and the social dialogue between employers and trades unions at European level; in addition, the Commission presented its plans for preparing a Green Paper on social policy.

During the discussion on employment and the social dialogue, I stresed that Community action in the social affairs area needed to improve the working of the labour market and encourage the creation of jobs, and must not inhibit the competitiveness and flexibility of Community businesses. I also stated the Government's belief that Community resources, in particular the European social fund, should continue to be concentrated on programmes to help those at the greatest disadvantage in the labour market, especially the long-term unemployed.

In this discussion, UNICE—the main European employers' association—made it clear that its priority, too, was the restoration of Community competitiveness, given recent indications that the EC is falling behind in world markets, and called for the abandonment of EC measures which it considered would damage jobs, including a number in the field of employment and industrial relations law.

In accordance with the resolution adopted by the Council during the United Kingdom presidency, I expect that there will be a further discussion on employment and unemployment in the Community at the next Council meeting on 1 June. The Commission is likely to bring forward suggestions for the Council to consider then.

Unemployment Register

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people claiming unemployment benefit came off the register as a result of adjudication decisions and disallowances by type in each month from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 11 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about how many people came off the register as a result of adjudication decisions and disallowances by type in each month from 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1993. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, I am not able to provide the information you have requested as not all clients notify my local offices of the reasons for stopping their claim. An adverse adjudication decision does not remove a person from the unemployed register. In certain circumstances, people whose claim for unemployment benefit is disallowed, continue to register as unemployed in order to receive other benefits such as Income Support and National Insurance contributions credits. If a person disagrees with an adjudication decision, they are advised to continue to register as unemployed to avoid the possibility of losing entitlement to benefit should their appeal to a Social Security Appeal Tribunal succeed.

Although information is not available in the format you requested, statistics on the volumes and types of adjudication decisions, nationally and by originating region, are collated and published quarterly. The reports, entitled "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions", have recently been revised to include the percentage of adverse decisions. At the time of writing, reports for the period up to and including September 1992 have been published and are available in the Library.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful on this occasion.

As decided by the Administrative Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Fraudulent Claims

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants have been deemed to have made fraudulent unemployment benefits claims in each month since May 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 11 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of fraudulently made claims to unemployment benefits. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, the information you requested is not available in the required format. However, I have provided below the quarterly figures of the number of people who have voluntarily withdrawn their claims to benefit, or have started to declare part-time earnings not previously disclosed, as a direct result of an investigation by an Employment Service Inspector.

Quarterly periods	Withdrawn/ modified claims
1 April 1991 to 30 June 1991	12,451
1 July 1991 to 31 September 1991	13,351
1 October 1991 to 31 December 1991	12,528
1 January 1992 to 31 March 1992	14,691
1 April 1992 to 30 June 1992	17,747
1 July 1992 to 31 September 1992	18,555
1 October 1992 to 31 December 1992	15,150
1 January 1993 to 31 March 1993	12,259

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Redundancies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies were declared in each month since May 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information is given in the following table. Estimates from the labour force survey give the numbers of redundancies in the three months prior to each survey. The LFS moved from an annual to a quarterly survey in spring 1992.

	Redundancies
Spring 1991	388,000
Spring 1992	322,000
Summer 1992	278,000
Autumn 1992	310,000

Claimants (Job Offers)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployment benefit claimants have been deemed to have unreasonably turned down job offers in each month since May 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 11 May 1993.

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of unemployment benefit claimants deemed to have unreasonably turned down job offers in each month since May 1991. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The information is not available on a monthly basis as requested but statistics are compiled quarterly. This information is available in a published document, the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions", under the heading Refusal of Employment. Copies of this document can be obtained from the House of Commons Library.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Employment Service

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress the employment service has made in each quarter in meeting the targets outlined in the 1992-93 agency agreement; and what were the (a) total unemployed job placings against profiled target, (b) long-term unemployed job placings, (c) people with disabilities job placings, (d) inner-city job placings, (e) employment training referral to start ratio, (f) actual number and proportion of new claims not pursued following initial contact and (g) number of people who withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators, for each quarter.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am informed by the chief executive of the employment service that in the last quarter of 1992-93, ES placed a total of 324,400 unemployed people into jobs, bringing the total to 1,420,400 against an annual target of 1·425 million. Twenty-five per cent. of this quarter's placings were long-term claimants, 2·9 per cent. were people with disabilities and 35 per cent. were unemployed people in inner cities bringing the annual totals to 24 per cent., 2·8 per cent. and 34 per cent. against annual targets of 19 per cent., 2·5 per cent. and 36 per cent. respectively. The Employment Training/Employment Action referral to start ratio was 2·5:1, resulting in a total of 2·6:1 against an annual target of 2·5:1. New claims not pursued following initial contact in the final quarter were 107,798, 9 per cent. of initial inquiries, resulting in a total of 481,722 at the annual target level of 10 per cent. A total of 11,900 pepole withdrew their claim to benefit after contact with fraud investigators in the final quarter, bringing the total to 61,000 against an annual target of 58,000. For information on the employment service's performance for each of the first three quarters of 1992-93 I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave her on 28 October 1992, Official Report, columns 725-26, and on 9 December 1992, Official Report, columns 733-34, and the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) on 16 February 1993, Official Report, column 185.

Employment Action

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were participating in employment action in each month since April 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is given in the following table:

Restart

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployment benefit claimants have been placed on restart courses in each month since May 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M.E.G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 11 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about Restart Courses. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Restart Courses are short courses normally lasting for one week. They aim to help those people who have been unemployed for a long time and are having the most difficulty in getting back to work. They are not an alternative to regular job search or other employment or training programmes. Essentially, they provide people with the opportunity to explore all the options open to them and give them confidence to take the next step back to work.

Since 1990, people who have been unemployed for two years or more who refuse to take up a place on an Employment Department employment or training programme at their Restart interview, are asked to attend a Restart Course.

I have set out the information you have asked for in the table attached. You will see that we collect information about starters on Restart Courses on a quarterly basis. All those that attend Restart Courses are unemployed and claiming state benefit.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Starters and completers on restart courses April 1991 to March 1993

	1991-92 starters	1992-93 starters
April to June	38,651	26,440
July to September	36,805	28,577
October to December	29,229	32,300
January to March	29,155	37,388
Total	133,840	124,705

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of people in work in each month since May 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: The work force in employment is published on a quarterly basis only. The available information is as follows:

Workforce in employment in the United Kingdom seasonally adjusted

1991
March	26,336
June	26,044
September	25,845
December	25,681
1992
March	25,625
June	25,450
September	25,052
December	24,960

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people have been unemployed in Darlington in March, June, September and December in each of the last four years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Claimant unemployment figures by age are produced quarterly for the months of January, April, July and October, and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. These figures are not adjusted for seasonality.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what levels of (a) total, (b) male, (c) female and (d) 16 to 25 years, unemployment was identified by the 1991 census.

Mr. McLoughlin: The definition of unemployment used in the 1991 census of population differs from the claimant court definition and the internationally recognised ILO definition used in the labour force survey. It does not include an "actively seeking work" criterion. The information requested is as follows and relates to Great Britain:

	Number
(a) total:	2,484,509
(b) male:	1,710,891
(c) female:	773,618
(d) 16-24 years:	762,597

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many initial claimants of unemployment benefit were advised to claim other benefits instead in each month since April 1992; and what percentage of new claims this figure represents;

(2) how many initial claims for unemployment benefit there were in each month since April 1992; and how many were successful.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 11 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions about how many initial claims for Unemployment Benefit there were in each month since April 1992 and how many were successful; and how many initial claimants were advised to claim other benefits instead and what percentage of new claims this figure represents. These are matters which fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency. As the questions you have asked are related, I have provided a table which incorporates both replies for ease of reference and clarity. I hope that this is acceptable.

The attached table shows, at Column 1, the total number of people who contacted my local offices in each calendar month since April 1992 with a view to making a new claim to Unemployment Benefit. Column 2 shows the actual number of new claims taken. The difference between the two figures represents claims which were not pursued. A claim not pursued occurs when a client decides, as a direct result of discussion with my local office people, not to pursue their claim for benefit. This may be for any of a wide variety of reasons; for example, my people may advise the clients that they do not appear to meet eligibility conditions. I should emphasise, however, our instructions are quite clear in stating that clients must never be told they cannot claim. A non pursuit case can only result from the client's own voluntary decision after the benefit conditions have been explained to them.

One of the reasons why a claim may not be pursued is that an adviser may identify that clients should be claiming a more appropriate benefit and advise them accordingly. Where appropriate, the adviser will contact other agencies, such as DSS, or help the client complete the necessary forms. Information on cases where the adviser has been actively involved in getting a client on to another benefit is collected centrally and is shown in column 3. This column only shows starts on other benefits. We do not hold information on how many clients are referred to an alternative benefit, but do not actually claim it.

The statistical months shown in the table can be either four or five weeks, which accounts for some of the fluctuations in them.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many initial claims for unemployment benefit were refused under the actively seeking work provisions in each month since April 1992; and what percentage of new claims this represents.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 11 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of initial claims for unemployment benefit that were refused under the actively seeking work provision in each month since April 1992 and what percentage of new claims this represents. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

This information is not available in the precise form requested. The information we collect in respect of adjudication activity refers to the total number of decisions given under each question and does not distinguish between initial claims and subsequent claims. These statistics are not available on a monthly basis, but are compiled quarterly. The information is available in a published document, the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions", under the heading of Actively Seeking Employment. Copies of this document can be obtained from the House of Commons Library.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many initial claims for unemployment benefit were refused because of adjudication decisions and disallowances in each month since April 1992; if she will break down the figures by type of refusal; and if she will give the figures as a percentage of new claims.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Tony Lloyd, dated 11 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question about the number of initial unemployment benefit claims disallowed monthly since April 1992. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

This information is not available in the form you have requested. The information we collect in respect of adjudication activity does not distinguish between decisions given in respect of initial claims and those relating to subsequent claims. Adjudication statistics are not available on a monthly basis, as requested, but statistics are compiled quarterly. Information on the total number of decisions given, and the proportion disallowed, under each question is available in a published document, the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions". Copies of this document can be obtained from the House of Commons Library.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Employment, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for the Durham area for (a) average earnings, (b) average gross hourly earnings and (c) average weekly hours total for (i) all women, (ii) women part-time workers, (iii) women manual workers and (iv) women non-manual workers; and what are the comparable figures for men.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information for employees in the county of Durham is contained in the following table:

Average gross earnings and hours of employees on adult rates of pay whose pay was not affected by absence for the survey pay period: April 1992

	Average weekly earnings £	Average hourly earnings £	Average total hours £
All employees
Women	158·2	4·96	30·1
Manual women	117·3	4·04	29·9
Non-manual women	181·9	5·58	30·2
Men	293·7	6·99	41·4
Manual men	247·0	5·81	43·2
Non-manual men	347·4	8·90	38·8
Part-time employees
Women	79·3	4·12	18·4
Men	..	..	..

Source: New Earnings Survey: April 1992.
Note: ".." denotes sample number too low or standard error too large for reliable estimate.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 or 17-year-olds living in the Durham area are not in full-time education and (a) are on a youth training scheme or (b) are on a waiting list for a youth training scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are currently 791 young people from Durham city area on youth training, including a small number of 18-year-olds. Four 16 or 17-year-olds are presently on a waiting list for YT.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken to ensure high standards of off-the-job education for youth training trainees.

Mr. McLoughlin: All youth training trainees have the opportunity to receive training which leads to an approved qualification at, or above, national vocational qualification level II—or, for young people who are endorsed as having special training needs, other appropriate outcomes. Each training and enterprise council is required to operate an effective quality assurance system for providers of off-the-job or on-the-job training.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds living in the Durham area have applied for youth training but not succeeded since 1990.

Mr. McLoughlin: Figures show that since January 1990, 133 16 and 17-year-olds were submitted but did not start on youth training schemes in the Durham city area. Of these, 129 went into other training or education or found jobs. The destination of the remaining four young people is not known.

Private Residential Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has concerning levels of pay in the private residential care industry; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None; pay in the private sector is a matter for employers and employees.

Health and Safety Representatives

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to ensure that health and safety representatives are elected for each workplace; and if she will require employers to recognise such persons' rights and duties.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Safety Representatives and Safety Committees Regulations 1977 allow recognised trade unions to appoint safety representatives, although in some cases the representatives are, in fact, elected. The regulations also give these safety representatives certain rights and duties. The Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Bill, which is currently before the House, contains a provision to further strengthen these rights by protecting safety representatives against being dismissed for carrying out their health and safety duties. I have no other plans to change the current arrangements.

Low Pay

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what definition of low pay is in use by her Department.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no official definition of what constitutes low pay.

River Safety

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps her Department is taking to publish an account of progress in the implementation of recommendations made after major disasters as recommended in the Hayes report on river safety.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive publish information about the implementation of such recommendations in various ways, including the Commission's annual report, other HSC/E publications and policy statements, and public conferences. In addition, progress is regularly reviewed, where appropriate, with the commission's industry advisory committees.

DEFENCE

Sandown Class Vessels

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to invite tenders for a further batch of Sandown class mine counter-measure vessels.

Mr. Aitken: We hope to be in a position to issue invitations to tender for a further batch of Sandown class single role minehunters before the summer recess.

United States (Aircraft Purchases)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the value to the United Kingdom, in pounds sterling, of the offset arrangements linked to the purchase from the United States of the E-3D AWACS Sentry aircraft.

Mr. Aitken: Boeing's performance against the AWACS offset requirement has been measured in United States dollars. Using an average exchange rate for the period in question, the value of contracts placed under the terms of the agreement is approximately £950 million.

Arms Exports

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish figures showing the total value of the United Kingdom's arms exports for each year since 1986; and what was the value of arms export sales to third-world countries in those years.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 23 February, Official Report, columns 577-78.

MOD Hospitals

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by country and region the Ministry of Defence hospitals in the United Kingdom which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1991-92 and 1992-93, with the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital in each year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Service hospital	County	Region	Number of beds[1]
			1991[2]	1992[2]	1993[2]
Cambridge military hospital, Aldershot	Hampshire	Wessex	47	38	38

Empty Properties, Biggin Hill

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential properties are empty at Biggin Hill; and for how long they have been empty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 March 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, 81 service married quarters at Biggin Hill were empty as follows:

	Number
Under one year	54
Over one year	18
Over two years	9

Eight of these properties were allocated to service families who were due to move in shortly and the remaining 73 were in the process of being sold.

Air-to-surface Missiles

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement about the development of medium air-to-surface missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 20 April, Official Report, column 168.

Weapon Development Programmes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the international co-operative weapon development programmes the United Kingdom Government are engaged in, together with, in each case, the partner nation and the expenditure committed in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the information contained in chapter 3, table 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1992 (Cm 1981). The information on expenditure committed is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate time and cost.

Military Nuclear Sites

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the programmes, and the expenditure for them in 1992-93 and 1993-94, for (a) the clear-up of British military nuclear sites and materials and (b) participation in nuclear proliferation control efforts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department attaches great importance to any clear-up programmes necessary, and deals with each situation as it arises. Details of each case are classified.

The Government attach a high priority to pursuing effective measures to prevent the proliferation of nuclear weapons. My Department is actively supporting the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in its efforts to seek an indefinite extension to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and is working to promote effective international controls on nuclear exports to help prevent proliferation. In order to assist with the safe and secure dismantlement of nuclear weapons in Russia, we are providing the Russian Federation with nuclear weapons transport vehicles, and special containers. Expenditure on this programme for 1992-93 was some £1,500,000; we estimate that expenditure for 1993-94 will be around £15,000,000. A number of personnel within my Department work on nuclear non-proliferation related matters; their costs are not separately identifiable.

Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter), 29 March, Official Report column 16, whether he has now received full clarification from the tenderers of their bids for the amphibious helicopter carrier; when he expects his Department to complete the evaluation of bids; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken [pursuant to his answer, 23 April 1993, col. 241]: I can now announce the results of the competition for the new helicopter carrier for the Royal Navy. Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd has won the competition by a very substantial margin of over £50 million. It will build the ship in conjunction with Kvaerner Govan on the Clyde. In reaching this decision, we took full account of wider factors such as the future of Swan Hunter Shipbuilders. The final judgment was made on our normal technical and value for money criteria.

This order demonstrates the Government's commitment to improving our amphibious capability and will provide our forces with a vessel suitable for a variety of operations. The ship will provide accommodation for helicopters, men, guns, land vehicles and other equipment and a platform from which to mount a helicopter assault. The ship will also significantly improve our ability to provide humanitarian assistance around the world.

ATTORNEY GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to lay before Parliament and publish the annual report of the Serious Fraud Office for the year 1992-93.

The Attorney-General: The annual report for the SFO for 1992-93 was laid before Parliament at 11 am today and then published. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

TRANSPORT

Reduced Child Fares

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to guarantee the reduced fares scheme for children following bus privatisation and deregulation in Greater London.

Mr. Norris: Bus privatisation will have no effect on the availability of child fares in London because bus operators will continue to provide services for London Transport, at the fares set by London Transport.

After deregulation, fares—including those for children—will be a matter for individual operators. However, we intend to extend to London local authorities the power already available to authorities outside London to offer travel concessions for children under 16 years, and school children under 18 years.

A21

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the way forward for the improvements to the A21 between Flimwell and Robertsbridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am pleased to announce that the three programmed schemes in preparation along this stretch of A21 in East Sussex are being replaced by one comprehensive improvement between Flimwell and Robertsbridge. The improvement will include the Salehurst roundabout at Robertsbridge and the section of road between Flimwell and Hurst Green.

This announcement will be welcomed by the many local people and local authorities which made representations to me for a more strategic approach to the improvement of this length of the A21.

Railway Privatisation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications he has received from rail operators to provide international services over British Rail tracks under the Railway Regulations 1992.

Mr. Freeman: None. The channel tunnel is not yet open.

Rail Freight

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the procedures for ascertaining that the weight of freight per rail wagon does not exceed British Rail restrictions, and conforms with the requirements of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Freeman: Primary responsibility rests with British Rail. The Health and Safety Executive does not set or check weight limits for wagons. The design, construction and designated use of wagons prevent them from being loaded beyond their maximum capacity.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the maximum weight of a wagon for the carriage of freight on the railways.

Mr. Freeman: The maximum axle weight is 25·5 tonnes. The largest freight wagons in normal use are mineral wagons and large oil tankers mounted on two bogies with two axles, which weigh 102 tonnes fully laden.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Saving Trust

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds he has given to the Energy Saving Trust.

Mr. Maclean: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), on 19 February 1993, Official Report, column 382.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the objects of the Energy Saving Trust.

Mr. Maclean: The directors of the Energy Saving Trust have set out the objects of the trust in a mission statement. This declares that the trust will encourage the efficient use of all forms of energy in the United Kingdom, leading to an overall reduction in total energy consumption and its consequent environmental impact. The trust will seek to sponsor initiatives that also provide long term economic benefits to the nation.

The trust aims to promote a broad awareness and understanding of the benefits of energy efficiency and conservation and will also promote training in energy-saving practices and technology.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what notional additional environmental costs his Department assigns to (a) gas, (b) coal and (c) nuclear generation.

Mr. Maclean: The Department does not assign costs in the way that the hon. Gentleman suggests.

A report recently produced by the Economic and Social Research Council-sponsored centre for social and economic research on the global environment for the Department of Trade and Industry on the social costs of fuel cycles has produced some estimates of "externality adders". The numbers produced in this report should be seen as indicative rather than authoritative.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has had from Professor David Pearce on the problems of assigning money values to environmental damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have sought no specific proposals. Professor Pearce is leading a team of researchers who have been commissioned by my Department to estimate the external, including environmental costs and benefits, of landfilling and of incinerating waste. I have referred to Professor Pearce's report of fuel cycle costs in reply to the previous question.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what study his Department has made of the reasons why people apply for grants to install insulation in their loft.

Mr. Maclean: We have made no study of the reasons why people apply for grants to install energy efficiency improvements. It is assumed that people do so in order to benefit from the increased energy efficiency which such improvements bring.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further information he has made available to local authorities about the standard Spending assessments for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: A publication "Standard Spending Assessment Handbook 1993-94" has been produced to provide details of the standard spending assessments (SSA) of each local authority. Copies have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Copies are being sent to every local authority in England and to the local authority associations.

EC Emissions Directives

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the occasions, in the last five months, when European directives on smoke, sulphur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide and lead have been exceeded; where this has taken place; and if the information was released to the public.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The air quality standards in these directives are set on the basis of compliance with limit values over 12-month periods. The standards for nitrogen dioxide and lead were not breached in 1992. Data for smoke and sulphur dioxide for the period April 1992 to March 1993 are not yet available, but provisional figures indicate that these standards have also not been breached. The public can obtain information about air quality, based on measured concentrations of sulphur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide and ozone, from daily bulletins on the Government's freephone 0800 556677, on CEEFAX page 404, on Teletext page 187 or from certain newspapers.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Children's Play

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress has been made on discussing Sports Council funding for the national children's play and recreation unit; and what measures will be implemented to fund children's play after March 1993 pending the completion of these tasks.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply 28 January 1993, Official Report, column 853]: The Sports Council has now taken over the national play information centre and the play unit's work on playwork education and training along with seven of the unit's staff. An eighth officer will be employed on a consultancy basis. The Council's budget for play for 1993-94 is £300,000, which includes financial support for the four national centres for playwork education. In addition, the Sports Council's trust company has agreed to give a grant of £25,000 to the National Voluntary Council for Children's Play. I am delighted with these decisions which show the serious way in which the Sports Council is tackling its new responsibilities.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Emergency Planning

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what lessons his Department has drawn from the 1990-91 Gulf war for emergency planning of local authority involvement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local authorities were involved in the planning for the reception of possible casualties arising from the 1990-91 Gulf conflict. The principal lesson learnt was the importance of involving local authorities in the making of such arrangements from as early a time as possible.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what criteria were used in deciding future allocations of Home Office emergency planning grant aid to local authorities; and what consultations were undertaken with local authorities over the allocation;

(2) what plans he has to issue new guidelines to local authorities on the use of civil defence and emergency planning grant aid following the changes in international relations since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office wrote to the local authority associations and to individual local authorities in December 1992 to seek their views on a new method of distributing the total available civil defence grant to individual authorities.

We have proposed a system based on a formula reflecting the needs of the emergency planning process and, where appropriate, the number of districts in the county or metropolitan are concerned.

Comments have been received on these proposals and the proposed allocations for 1994-95 onward will be announced shortly.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultations have been held since November 1989 regarding the length of the period of warning the civil defence system assumes for planning purposes before the outbreak of a major conflict in Europe; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment his Department has made since November 1989 of the threat to the United Kingdom from the use of chemical or biological weapons, in respect of civil defence issues.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The threat to the United Kingdom is kept under constant review. The process of integrated emergency management which is promoted by the Home Office calls for the development of plans based on the mitigation of effects and the continued delivery of service in an emergency, whatever the cause. Officials are considering the question of warning times within this context.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the period from November 1989 (a) the dates of, (b) the subjects discussed at and (c) attendances at any meetings Ministers have had with the relevant Ministers responsible for civil defence and emergency planning in other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No such meetings have taken place. Regular contact with other NATO countries on these subjects is maintained at official level.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to recruit qualified or experienced emergency planners to his Department (a) to replace the local authorities' adviser and (b) to oversee the use of civil defence and emergency planning grant aid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no plans to replace the local authorities' adviser. Emphasis will be placed upon visits by Home Office officials to local authorities and regular meetings with the local authority associations.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect reorganisation of local government in (a) England and (b) Wales will have on arrangements for grant-aided local authority emergency planning.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The precise effect of local government reorganisation on local authority grant-aided emergency planning arrangements will have to be determined area by area.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had since April 1992 over improving the responses of the emergency services to peace-time emergencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Part of the work of the civil emergencies adviser, Mr. David Brook, is to assist the emergency services in preparing their response to peace-time disasters. He is in regular contact with and has meetings with the emergency services, local authorities and others who have a role to play in preparing for and responding to disasters. In August 1992 the Home Office publication "Dealing with Disaster" was issued which contained guidance compiled by Mr. Brook aimed at assisting the provision of an effective response.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made for the disposal of obsolescent message switch equipment installed at (a) regional Government headquarters, (b) United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation control centres and (c) local authority emergency centres; and if he will make a statement regarding the overall cost of installing, maintaining and disposing of the message switch equipment at these locations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The message switch equipment at the regional government headquarters and at the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation control centres was the subject of a combined rental and maintenance agreement with British Telecom. This agreement covered the repayment of capital cost, installation, maintenance and subsequent removal.

The total cost of the agreement over the 10-year period, during which the equipment was installed, amounted to just under £3·5 million in respect of equipment at regional government headquarters and £3·75 million in respect of equipment at the United Kingdom Warning and Monitoring Organisation.

The message switch equipment, which was installed at local authority emergency centres, was purchased by the Home Office at a cost of £2·1 million including installation. Annual maintenance costs, in the final year, amounted to £1·5 million.

The total cost of the disposal of equipment installed at local authorities is estimated at £20,000. Where a local authority has indicated an interest in retaining a message switch network within its area, the Home Office has transferred ownership of the equipment to that authority with a proviso that it should not be resold.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding his Department is making available to (a) the BBC and (b) independent broadcasters in respect of his Department's proposals to rely on the broadcast media to issue national warnings of possible air attacks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise costs will depend on the outcome of discussions which are now taking place with the BBC.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether local proposals to retain parts of the air-raid warning siren network for use in peacetime emergencies will be eligible for grant aid from his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals his Department has made for the future securing of a reserve fire-fighting capacity for use in time of war and national emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government continue to maintain a stockpile of emergency fire service appliances and equipment. Maintenance of the stockpile was contracted out to the private sector in 1991. The contract is for 10 years with a breakpoint after five.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table based on the 1992 reported crime figures showing the total number of crimes reported in each police authority area in 1992, and also showing these figures as a rate per 1,000 population in those areas and as a rate per uniformed officer in those areas.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is given in the table:

Passport Agency

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what performance targets he has set for the United Kingdom Passport Agency in 1993-94.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: During 1993-94, I shall expect the Passport Agency to continue to provide a high standard of service to the public while seeking further efficiency savings in its operations.

I have set the agency the following key targets:

(i) to process properly completed straightforward applications within a maximum of 20 working days in the periods of peak demand between January and June, 15 working days in July and August, and 10 working days at other times,
(ii) to process such applications within an overall average of nine working days for the year as a whole, and
(iii) to reduce unit costs by a further 3 per cent. in real terms in comparison with the outturn for 1992-93.

The chief executive will remain directly accountable to me for the performance of the Passport Agency. An advisory board, including two private sector members with experience of delivery services to the public, will continue to provide me with an independent assessment of the agency's performance.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women of an ethnic minority background are serving as police officers in the Metropolitan police force as of 1 May.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There were 476 men and 147 women officers of an ethnic minority background.

Fire and Civil Defence Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to confer new duties or powers upon those fire and civil defence authorities other than the London FCDA.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Draft civil defence regulations were published last December and comments received are being considered. There are no plans to confer new duties or powers upon any of the fire and civil defence authorities.

Hosni E. Farhat

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the decision regarding the recommended minimum length of sentence to be served in the case of Hosni E. Farhat was made by the then Home Secretary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: It is assumed that by "recommended minimum length of sentence", the hon. Member refers to the punitive element of a discretionary life sentence which must be served to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence. This period was previously known as the "tariff".

Following advice from the trial judge and the then Lord Chief Justice, the Secretary of State decided in 1985 that the first review of Mr. Farhat's case by the parole board should take place after 17 years in custody. From that, Mr. Farhat will have concluded that the punitive element of his sentence was at least 20 years.

Under the transitional provisions in schedule 12 to the Criminal Justice Act 1991, the Secretary of State issued a certificate to Mr. Farhat in August 1992 notifying him that the relevant part of his sentence—as the punitive element is now known—is 20 years.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the case of Hosni E. Farhat.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend and his predecessors have previously received a number of representations alleging that Mr. Farhat was wrongfully convicted. These were fully considered but they brought to light no grounds for intervening in the case. Further representations have recently been received from Mr. Farhat and these are now being considered.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what review has been undertaken of the intelligence information relating to the case of Hosni E. Farhat.

Mr. Jack: I do not know what specific information the hon. Member has in mind, but in considering the latest representations about the safety of Mr. Farhat's conviction, my right hon. and learned Friend will take account of any relevant information which is available to him.

Attempted Murder

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons convicted of attempted murder left prison in each of the last five years; and what was the average length of detention in each year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Andrew F. Bennett, dated 10 May 1993:

PERSONS CONVICTED OF ATTEMPTED MURDER AND DISCHARGED WITHIN THE LAST FIVE YEARS

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of persons convicted of attempted murder who have been discharged from prison in each of the last five years. I am sorry to tell you that the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. This is because in prison statistics prior to February 1991 attempted murder was recorded within the "other homicide" offence classification and not recorded separately. As a result, it would involve checking a large number of cases with prison service establishments.

The readily available information relates to the length of sentence imposed and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", Supplementary tables volume 2 (tables S2.7 of the issue for 1991, Cm 2134), copies of which are held in the Library. A copy of the relevant page from the 1991 publication is attached.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average recommended minimum length of sentence to be served in cases of attempted murder in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jack: On the assumption that the question relates to the punitive element—now known as the relevant part—of a discretionary life sentence imposed for attempted murder, the information is as follows:

Year	Number of cases	Actual or average punitive element (years)
1979	1	15
1980	2	7·5
1981	4	12·9
1982	1	6
1983	1	10
1984	5	9·7
1985	1	10
1986	2	9·5
1987	4	13
1988	1	7
1989	2	8
1990	3	7·3
1991	3	8
1992	4	7·5

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many foreign nationals are currently serving sentences for attempted murder in United Kingdom prisons; and what is their average length of sentence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Andrew F. Bennett, dated 10 May 1993:

FOREIGN CITIZENS SERVING SENTENCES FOR ATTEMPTED MURDER

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of foreign citizens currently serving sentences for attempted murder. The latest available provisional figures are for 28 February 1993. They show 23 foreign nationals serving sentences for attempted murder in prison service establishments in England and Wales. Of these 5 were serving life sentences. The lengths of sentence of those serving determinate sentences varied from 5 years up to 30 years; their average sentence was about 12·4 years.

Libyan Prisoners

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Libyan citizens are (a) currently serving sentences and (b) awaiting sentencing in United Kingdom prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the director general of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Andrew F. Bennett, dated 10 May 1993:

LIBYAN CITIZENS IN PRISON SERVICE ESTABLISHMENTS

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the number of Libyan citizens currently serving sentences and the numbers on remand. The latest available provisional figures are for 28 February 1993. They show that eight prisoners serving sentences in prison service establishments in England and Wales had their nationality recorded as Libyan. There were no remand prisoners recorded as having Libyan nationality.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that people coming from overseas to do domestic service work in Britain are given the right to change employers and other rights enjoyed by similar workers recruited in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Each case involving a domestic worker who wishes to remain in the United Kingdom after having left his or her employer is carefully considered before any enforcement action is taken, and account is taken of any compassionate circumstances. Domestic workers are entitled to the protection of our criminal and employment law.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the relationship between the level and nature of his Department's support for youth work and the change in the level of juvenile crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: No such assessment has been made. Except for certain projects which are supported under the safer cities initiative, the Home Office does not directly fund youth work; but the Home Office research and planning unit is currently involved in an evaluation of a number of local projects which have deliberately targeted young people at risk of offending.

PRIME MINISTER

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have been made to ensure co-ordination between Government Departments on non-fossil fuel obligation 3.

The Prime Minister: The responsibility for making orders imposing a non-fossil fuel obligation on public electricity suppliers in England and Wales lies with my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. He consults other Ministers as appropriate.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank Loans (Small Businesses)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to encourage the banks to increase their loans to the small businesses sector for capital investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced proposals to improve the small firms loan guarantee scheme in his Budget on 16 March. The changes will take effect on 1 July.

Council Tax

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by district council in Nottinghamshire the number of appeals presently notified to valuation officers by property owners against council tax bandings; and how long he expects it to take for these appeals to be dealt with.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 May 1993]: As at 6 May, some 5,398 appeals have been made by taxpayers in Nottinghamshire, against their council tax bandings. Of these 277 are in Ashfield, 453 in Bassetlaw, 327 in Mansfield and 685 in Newark and Sherwood. The remaining 3,656 are in Broxtowe, Gedling, Nottingham and Rushcliffe for which individual statistics are not yet available.

As the total number of appeals which will be made in Nottinghamshire cannot yet be predicted, it is not possible to determine the length of time it will take to deal with these appeals.

Company Cars

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 379, if he will list the circumstances when home-to-work travel in a car made available by an employer is not regarded as private use.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 May 1993]: Home-to-work travel in a car made available by an employer is not regarded as private use:

where the employee has a travelling appointment;
where the employee travels from home to a temporary place of work and the distance travelled is less than the distance between the normal place of work and the temporary place of work;
where, exceptionally, the home qualifies under tax law as a place of work and the employee travels from home to another place of work in the performance of his duties.

There are also circumstances where home-to-work travel in a car provided by an employer is regarded as private use but is ignored for tax purposes. These are:

where a disabled person is provided with a car from home-to-work travel and there is no other private use;
where a car is provided for home-to-work travel when public transport is disrupted;
where a car is provided for late night journeys from work-to-home, within the terms of Inland Revenue extra-statutory concession A66; where the car is a pooled car and any home-to-work travel is merely incidental to its business use.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) general receptionists and (b) telephone receptionists are employed within each of his Department's offices; and how many are Welsh speaking.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers of reception staff employed by the Department are:

	Number
Receptionists
Gwydyr House	2
Cathays Park	3
Telephonist and Receptionists
Brunel House (Cadw)	1
Trawsgoed	2
Caernarfon	2
Llandrindod Wells	1
Carmarthen	2
Colwyn Bay	1

Those at Trawsgoed and Caernarfon are Welsh speaking.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to place all public advertisements produced by his Department either (a) bilingually in the Welsh language and English language or (b) in the Welsh language only.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department is fully committed to providing for the needs of Welsh speakers and English speakers alike. As a matter of policy, all official notices appear bilingually, and it is the Department's objective that public advertisements should be bilingual.

Holiday Play Schemes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what competitive tendering procedures were used for the selection of Acorn Nursery as provider of holiday play schemes for children of Welsh Office staff; what financial evaluation was made of competing bids; what consultation with different grades of staff was carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Welsh Office holiday play scheme contract was advertised in the local press. Tenders were evaluated on the basis of the cost benefit to the Department and the value for money to parents—who meet the major part of the cost. Two tenderers came within the Department's cost limit and satisfied its quality criterion. They were interviewed.

As the cost benefit to the Welsh Office was the same with either provider, consultations took place with a representative sample of users in a range of grades including junior clerical grades. Staff were unanimous in preferring the Acorn bid and the selection was made on that basis.

Child care forms an important part of my Department's policy to promote equality of opportunity, help staff combine a career and family responsibilities, and maximise the contribution of skilled and experienced staff.

Disabled People

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he intends to take to encourage people with disabilities to become teachers, nursery nurses or teachers' aides.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The teaching as a career unit, funded by the Welsh Office and the Department for Education (DFE), promotes and publicises teaching. It has not undertaken any special targeting of the disabled.

The DFE is in consultation with disabled teachers' interest groups prior to the revision of its circular 1/88 "Physical and Mental Fitness to Teach of Teachers and of Entrants to Teacher Training". This will continue to stress that disability in itself does not mean that a person is medically unfit to teach, but that the paramount consideration should be the health and welfare of pupils.

EC Funding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Offical Report, column 412, if he will specify what the projects in the Betws and Taff Merthyr areas are; and what was the commencement date of those projects.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Project	Start Date
Betws Catchment Area
Pontardawe Access Improvements	May 1992
Innter Link Road Ammanford (Phase I)	January 1991
Block B, Capel Hedre Industrial Estate	January 1993
Environmental Improvements, Meadows Road, Cross Hands	March 1991
Cross Hands Business Park Workshop Units	March 1993
Cross Hands Business Park Landscaping	February 1992
Taff Merthyr Catchment Area
Trelewis Community Centre	February 1991
Cwm Cynon (South) Infrastructure	December 1992
Nixons Institute Mountain Ash	April 1993
Cwm Cynon Business Centre	December 1992
Penrhiwceiber Colliery Leisure Facility	June 1992
Deep Duffryn Colliery Leisure Facility	August 1992

Salmon

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to protect and enhance the number of spring salmon that are entering Welsh rivers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Rivers Authority is proposing new byelaws designed to improve spring salmon runs on the Dee, Wye and the Usk.

Children Leaving Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children and young people under the age of 17 years have left care in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many of them (a) left school with no qualifications, (b) remain unemployed, (c) are currently estimated to be sleeping rough and (d) are in goal or other corrective institutions.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally.

Denbighshire

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the representations he has received in regard to the inclusion of the communities of Nercwys, Nannerch, Gwernymynydd, Gwernaffield, Cilcain, Mostyn, Halkyn, Whitford, Brynford, Trelawnydd and Gwaerysgor, Llanasa, Ysaefivy and Cherwys in the proposed Denbighshire authority following the publication of his local government White Paper.

Mr. David Hunt: Since publishing my White Paper on 1 March 1993, I have received 42 written representations regarding the inclusion of these communities within the proposed unitary authority for Denbighshire.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Krypton Gas

Ms Jowell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library copies of the results of research commissioned since 1978 (a) by his Department and (b) by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. on the possible health effects of the discharge of krypton gas into the environment.

Mr. Eggar: Neither the Department of Trade and Industry nor its predecessor, the Department of Energy, has commissioned research into the possible health effects of krypton gas. Questions about any research commissioned by British Nuclear Fuels plc are matters for the company.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of the members of the board of BNFL and state which of them have a management role or a business interest in Touche Ross.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. Appropriate information on the directors of the company is given in BNFL's report and accounts, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

Inward Investment

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in which publications in other European countries advertisements have been placed by Government Departments in the current financial year promoting inward investment into the United Kingdom; what was the cost of the advertisements; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Sainsbury: During the 1992-93 financial year the Department of Trade and Industry spent £190,000 on advertisements in Europe promoting inward investment into the United Kingdom. In Germany advertisements were placed in Hadelsblatt, Top Business and Wirtschaftswoche, together with chamber of commerce magazines in Freiburg, Stuttgart, Mannheim, Karlsruhe and Reutlingen, while in Switzerland advertisements appeared in Bilanz, Basler Zeitung and Neue Zuercher Zeitung. The 1993-94 campaign has yet to be commissioned.

Copies of the advertisements have been placed in the Library.

Hydrocarbons Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to allow overseas counterparts of the British Geological Survey to bid for responsibility for United Kingdom oil and gas archives or to undertake surveys;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 336, which types of organisations in the United Kingdom he has identified as potentially suited to the work under the hydrocarbons programme mentioned in his answer.

Mr. Eggar: In considering which organisations may be invited to submit competitive bids for work under the hydrocarbons programme, the Department is taking account of the requirements of the relevant legislation and commercial sensitivity.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the work of the Renewable Energy Advisory Research Group.

Mr. Eggar: In December 1992 the report of the renewable energy advisory group to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade was published. The report's findings will be taken into account in the Government's renewable energy strategy document due to be published later this year.

Manufactured Exports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he has taken to ensure that British exports of manufactured goods to the United States of America do not face tariffs.

Mr. Needham: My Department takes every opportunity to press the United States and other countries to reduce existing tariff barriers and to oppose the introduction of new ones, both in general terms in the context of the general agreement of tariffs and trade and in instances of specific concern. For example, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear our strong opposition to the US auto industry's request that the US Treasury reclassifies sports utility vehicles as trucks to secure massive added tariff protection to the detriment of our Land Rover exports. We also support the EC in its efforts to seek an all-round tariff reduction in the Uruguay round negotiations.

THORP

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the specific products and by-products of thermal oxide reprocessing at Sellafield, with their respective levels and life of radioactivity, and volume produce; and if he will indicate the proposed purpose or use of each of these products and by-products.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 May 1993]: The thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield will recover uranium and plutonium from spent nuclear fuel. These materials can be recycled in civil power stations. British Nuclear Fuels plc expects that over 6,000 tonnes of uranium and some 40 to 50 tonnes of plutonium will be separated during the first 10 years of THORP's operation.

Following recovery of the uranium and plutonium, the residue, amounting to around 3 per cent. by weight, consists of waste. The long-term radiological content of the waste is lower than that of the spent fuel because the uranium and plutonium have been removed. For the estimated volumes of wastes involved and details of their contents, I refer the hon. Member to the 1991 United Kingdom radioactive waste inventory, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Work Permits

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits for overseas workers have been granted in each year since 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of work permits issued by the Department since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Number of work permits issued
1987	26,965
1988	33,021
1989	37,865
1990	43,619
1991	37,989
1992	37,917

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the top 10 countries whose citizens received work permits to pursue employment in Britain in 1992; and if she will give the number of applications accepted from each of these countries.

Mr. McLoughlin: The top 10 countries whose citizens received work permits in 1992 and the number of applications approved are given in the table:

Country	Work permits approved
USA	11,617
Japan	2,030
India	1,660
Australia	1,067
Canada	916
Sweden	568
South Africa	472
Peoples Republic of China	458
Poland	374
USSR	356

These figures do not include permits issued under the training and work experience scheme.

Employment, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information her Department has on how many women in the Durham area have initiated legal challenges against their employers since 1990 on the grounds on sexual offences, and on the results of such cases.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is held on how many people living in the Durham area have been denied unemployment benefit since 1990 because they are not available for work because they have an adult or child to care for during working hours.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 12 May 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question requesting information on how many people living in the Durham area have been denied unemployment benefit since 1990 because they are not available for work because they have an adult or child to care for during working hours. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, the information is not available in the form you have requested and it could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Statistics on the number of people whose claims for unemployment benefit have been disallowed because they are not available for work do not identify, separately, the number of people disallowed because they have caring responsibilities.

Adjudication statistics are compiled quarterly, for each Employment Service Region, and published in the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions". Information about claims disallowed because people are not available for work for any reason are recorded under the heading of "Availability". The figures for Durham are contained in the statistical return for Northern Region. Copies of this document can be obtained from the House of Commons Library.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of job vacancies in the Durham area.

Mr. McLoughlin: In March 1993, the latest date for which figures are available, the number, not seasonally adjusted, of unfilled vacancies at the jobcentre which covers the city of Durham was 229. Jobcentre vacancies do not represent the total number of vacancies available.

Electrical Equipment

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what legislation would be necessary and what legislation would need to be amended to privatise (a) the Electrical Equipment Certification Service and (b) any other part of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Primary legislation would be needed in either case.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Current Affairs Survey

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the most recent (a) national and (b) international circulation of the Central Office of Information publication "Current Affairs—A Monthly Survey"; what benefits accrued to the United Kingdom from its publication; and for what reasons its publication is being stopped.

Mr. Waldegrave: The most recent circulation figure for "Current Affairs—A Monthly Survey" was 714 copies. About three-quarters went to United Kingdom addresses. The publication was designed to enable readers of the annual "Britain Handbook" to be kept up to date with developments in British affairs.

Efforts to increase circulation have not been successful and production costs outweigh income from subscriptions.

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much money has been given by Her Majesty's Government to the Medical Research Council since 1988 for AIDS and HIV research.

Mr. Waldegrave: Between the years 1988-89 and 1992-93, Her Majesty's Government have allocated £68 million to the Medical Research Council for AIDS and HIV research.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library details of all Medical Research Council grants for HIV and AIDS research, together with the published and completed papers presented to the Medical Research Council as a consequence of this grant-aided work.

Mr. Waldegrave: A list of research grants supported by the MRC through its strategic and directed programmes have been placed in the Library. A list of published and completed papers could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Medical Research Scientists (Shares)

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to bar medical research scientists from holding shares in drugs companies whose products they are researching.

Mr. Robert Jackson: No. I can see no need to introduce legislation aimed specifically at medical research scientists. The Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 already restricts improper share dealing by a company's employees or by public servants. The Criminal Justice Bill, which is progressing through the House and will replace the existing legislation, contains provisions with a similar effect. Holdings of shares may also be subject to further restrictions under a scientist's terms of employment or contract.

HEALTH

AZT

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the present clinical criteria for having AIDS; what were the clinical criteria for having AIDS in 1987; how those criteria have changed; and what effect the criteria have on eligibility of patients to be prescribed AZT.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the United Kingdom, the current clinical criteria for AIDS are those set out by the US Centers for Disease Control in 1987. Copies will be placed in the Library. The 1987 AIDS case definition revised the 1985 definition by addition of non-infectious, non-cancerous HIV-associated conditions and by widening the diagnostic critieria for certain AIDS indicator diseases.

Zidovudine, or, AZT, is currently licensed in the United Kingdom for the following indications:

asymptomatic disease in adult patients showing signs of immune suppression, i.e., CD4 counts repeatedly below 200 per cumm or between 500 and 200 and falling rapidly early symptomatic HIV disease in adults with CD4 counts below 500 per cumm advanced disease, i.e., AIDS and AIDS Related Complex, in adults and children

HIV related symptons or asymptomatic disease with markers indicating significant HIV-related immune suppression in children over the age of three months.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) civil servants within her Department, (b) consultants sitting upon any of the advisory committees since 1977 or (c) other individuals involved organisationally in the Concorde trials have received money in royalties or grants, or had career positions, or directorships or consultancies, with the Wellcome Foundation, the Wellcome Trust or any of the Wellcome Foundation's subsidiary companies.

Dr Mawhinney: No civil servants within the Department have received money in any form from the Wellcome Foundation or the Wellcome Trust. Membership of the Committee on Safety of Medicines is published in the Medicines Commission annual report, which includes a comprehensive list of members' interests in the pharmaceutical industry. Information is not available for outside experts who sit on other Departmental advisory committees. The Concorde trial was organised by the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library the full results of the Concorde trials; and if she will make a statement on the results.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The full report of the trial is still in preparation and is due to be published within the next few months. A copy of the letter to The Lancet summarising the preliminary results is available in the Library.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will place in the Library all the relevant research data prior to the start of the Concorde trials in 1988, which showed that AZT was of benefit to HIV antibody positive asymptomatic individuals.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Prior to the start of the Concorde trial one paper had been published which indicated a potential benefit of AZT treatment in asymptomatic HIV-infected individuals, and this reported data on a very small number of subjects. A copy is available in the Library. (Lancet (i) 1988: pages 373-376).

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are being made for those Concorde trial subjects who were given the drug AZT: how many are still being prescribed the drug; and who is bearing the cost.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

All patients in the Concorde trial will have the opportunity to discuss their future treatment with their doctors in the light of the results of the trial and their own clinical status and will be told whether they received AZT or placebo during the blinded phase of the trial, if they wish to know. For those deciding to continue treatment with AZT and who fall within the currently licensed indications, the cost of the drug will be met by the national health service. There is no information available on the number of patients still being prescribed the drug.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Concorde trials relating to AZT were completed; when the results were announced; and if she will make a statement about the way in which the preliminary results were announced.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Analysis of the data from the Concorde trial collected up to 31 December 1992 was completed in March 1993; limited follow-up information will continue to be collected on the patients, in an unblinded fashion, so the trial is not completely finished. Preliminary results were published in a letter to The Lancet on 2 April 1993, having been announced to doctors and other staff involved with the trials at participating clinical centres at a meeting on 1 April 1993. The trial co-ordinating committee considered it important for the key data to be made available to an international readership in a preliminary report through the scientific press as soon as possible, to avoid the spread of inaccurate rumours among patients and their doctors.

Pegasus Drug Abuse Project

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current state of plans for the Pegasus drug abuse project proposed by the North East Thames regional health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: An application for funding for the Pegasus project proposal was considered recently by North East Thames regional health authority and the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Sir William Staveley, for details. An application was also made to the Department of Health by the Association for the Prevention of Addiction under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968. This was unsuccessful.

Children in Care

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to ensure that children who might abscond while in care are properly escorted while outside the home.

Mr. Yeo: Advice on physical intervention to prevent a detained child from running away from an open children's home, or while being escorted outside a secure accommodation care unit, is included in the guidance on permissible forms of control in children's residential care published by the Department on 28 April 1993. It is the responsibility of management to interpret this guidance and develop policies and procedures within which to operate. A copy of the guidance is available in the Library.

Back Pain

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the report from her Department's clinical standards advisory committee inquiry into back pain; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The group expects to report in the summer of 1994 to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Clinical standards advisory group reports are normally published along with a Government response within three months of receipt.

Male Circumcision

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to the NHS of male circumcision operations in the last 15 years for which figures are available; and what was the cost of comparable operations in the private sector.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

GP Fund Holders

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each district health authority within the Mersey region the total number of (a) general practitioners and medical practices and (b) general practitioners and medical practices that are fund holders.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information available is shown in the table.

FHSA	Number of GPs	Number of medical practices	Number of fundholding practices	Number of fundholding GPs
Cheshire	512	143	47	236
Liverpool	240	104	18	54
St. Helens and Knowsley	176	76	12	40
Sefton	141	55	13	52
Wirral	178	68	11	41
Total for Mersey RHA	1,247	446	101	423

Information on GP numbers is collected by family health services authorities; the data are for 1 October 1992. Fundholding figures are for 30 April 1993.

Complaints (Evidence)

Mr. Boyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 169, what action she takes to ensure that evidence presented to her by the Medical Advisory Committee is complete; and by what process a complainant may raise objections to the material before the committee.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Medical Advisory Committee gives advice to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on any penalty which should be imposed on a general practitioner who has been found in breach of his terms of service. There is no provision under the regulations for the involvement of the complainant in this consideration.

Drugs

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 April, Official Report, column 169, how many of the preparations listed as drugs acting on the skin (a) do not require a product licence under the Medicines Act 1968, (b) are available for purchase without a doctor's prescription at pharmacies and other retail outlets and (c) attracted fewer than 20 prescriptions a year met by the NHS in each of the years 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of products within this list which attracted fewer than 20 prescriptions was 788 in 1991 and 822 in 1992; figures for 1990 are not available. The remaining information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Health Centres

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to announce the results of the working group on the financing of health centres.

Dr. Mawhinney: We intend to announce the results, and our proposals, shortly.

Dementia

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether dementia is included within the ambit of the specific grant for mental illness.

Mr. Yeo: Yes.

Home Care Services

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to bring forward legislation to enforce the registration and inspection of private individual home care services.

Mr. Yeo: We have no plans to do so.

Junior Doctors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give average figures for (a) hours contracted, (b) duty hours and (c) hours on feet of junior hospital doctors in each year since 1971.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information on the average contracted hours of junior hospital doctors and dentists, at 30 September for each year, is as follows:

	Hours
1971-1975	Not available
1976	92
1977	91
1978	90
1979	90
1980	89
1981	89
1982	88
1983	87
1984	86
1985	85
1986	85
1987	82
1988	81
1989	81
1990	79
1991	79
1992	Not yet available

Information on duty hours and on "hours on feet" is not available centrally.

NHS Management Review

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce the terms of reference and membership of the NHS management functions and manpower review; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The continuing development of the national health service reforms requires the structure of the NHS above the level of local purchasers and providers to be examined. I have set up a review to consider what management processes and organisational structures will best deliver measurable improvements in health and effective and efficient services, through the operation of the NHS internal market, while minimising management costs and ensuring proper public accountability. I have asked the review team to complete its work in July.

The review team's terms of reference are as follows:

1. To carry out an organisational analysis of the main work and functions required to:
   - Ensure that the Government's reforms of the NHS are fully effected.
   - Ensure effective oversight of purchasers and providers operating in the NHS internal market.
   - Ensure that the Secretary of State is able to discharge her statutory responsibilities for the management of the NHS.
   - Ensure that the proportion of NHS expenditure devoted to direct patient care is maximised.
2. In the light of the above:
   - To determine the statutory responsibilities and the core functions which must continue to be discharged by bodies which are part of, or directly accountable to, central Government.
   - To make recommendations on the organisational structure required for this.
   - To consider possible future changes to the configuration of NHS purchasers—including DHA mergers, joint DHA/FHSA working and the development of the GP Fundholding scheme.
   - To make recommendations on the discharge of other essential functions, e.g., Estates Management and Information Management and Technology.
   - To determine the financial and manpower consequences, for the NHS and the Department of Health (including the NHSME), of conclusions reached.
3. The review team should take particular account of:
   - The need to achieve a balance between the benefits of decentralisation and the essential requirements of public accountability.
   - The need for an internally consistent regulatory framework to support the operation and development of the internal market.
   - The need for the development of effective purchasing in the NHS.
   - The conclusions of the Cadbury Report on corporate governance.

Ms Kate Jenkins, a member of the NHS policy board, will chair the review's steering group and lead the review team itself. The other members of the review team are:

Mr. Alan Langlands—(Deputy Chief Executive, NHS Management Executive)

Mr. Peter Griffiths—(Formerly Chief Executive, Guy's NHS Trust)

Mr. Ian Carruthers—(Chief Executive, Dorset Health Commission)

Mr. John Sherring—(Regional Director—West Midlands, Audit Commission)

Dr. Carol Propper—(NHS Management Executive on secondment from University of Bristol)

Members of the review team providing professional advice on specific areas are:

Professor Andrew Pettigrew—(Centre for Corporate Strategy and Change, Warwick Business School, University of Warwick)

Dr. Graham Winyard—(Medical Director, NHS Management Executive)

Mrs. Sue Williams—(Deputy Director of Nursing, NHS Management Executive)

Other sources of professional advice will be identified as necessary.

Clinical Services

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy on the use, by health authorities or trusts, when all other clinical indicators are equal, of age as a criterion for access to clinical services.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of clinicians to establish the need for and priority of medical treatment.

SCOTLAND

Piers

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, columns 538-39, if he will give a full breakdown of the cost of adapting the piers at Kennacraig, Port Ellen and Port Askaig per agency involved in the project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The breakdown of the estimated cost of adapting the piers at Kennacraig, Port Ellen and Port Askaig by source of funding is as follows:

	Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd.	Scottish Office	European Regional Development Fund
Kennacraig	299,000	161,000	120,000
Port Ellen	10,000	—	—
Port Askaig	70,000	—	—
	379,000	161,000	120,000

Council House Sales

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 383, if he will now make a statement on the evidence that he has received from East Lothian district council on 18 February, and also on 26 April, about abuses of the right to buy council houses with discounts; and if he will introduce amendments to the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 to prevent such abuses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has considered the information provided by East Lothian district council about certain right-to-buy sales in East Lothian. Our conclusion on the basis of this information is that it does not appear that anything has happened which is contrary to the right-to-buy provisions in the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987.

Tenants who are buying their homes should be free to make whatever financial arrangements they think desirable to suit their particular circumstances. A tenant who has bought a house is also free to dispose of it as he or she wishes, subject to the provisions for the repayment of discount if the disposal takes place within three years. We do not propose to amend the legislation to constrain these freedoms.

It is important that tenants should understand the financial implications of any agreement they might enter into. It is advisable for tenants to take independent legal advice before entering into any agreement, and we will emphasise this in revising the leaflet "Buy Your Home" later this year.

Forestry

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 20 April, Official Report, columns 89-90, if he will give biographical details of the members of the forestry review group.

Sir Hector Monro: All the members of the forestry review group are serving civil servants and have responsibilities, knowledge and experience, relevant to its remit and work. I see no benefit in publishing further biographical details.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the work of the forestry review group does not jeopardise the Forestry Commission's existing policy and practice of allowing free public access to its land.

Sir Hector Monro: The remit of the forestry review group expressly includes the request that it should make proposals for changes which would improve the effectiveness of the delivery of the Government's forestry policy objectives, having regard to the Government's other economic and environmental policies.

Such objectives and policies clearly include the Forestry Commission's practice of encouraging public access to woodlands as stated in its "Forestry Policy for Great Britain", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individual Forestry Commission land holdings there are.

Sir Hector Monro: It is estimated that there are about 5,000 individual Forestry Commission land holdings, excluding individual housing plots and other small areas.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total amount of public expenditure generated since 1981 by former Forestry Commission land passing into the private sector and becoming eligible for agricultural grants and subsidies.

Sir Hector Monro: The amount of public expenditure generated in these circumstances has been negligible.

Woodlands sold by the commission are rarely converted to agricultural use as, under the felling licensing procedures, there is a general presumption against this. Existing agricultural land sold by the commission will normally have been attracting agricultural grants and subsidies before sale.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the total area of land disposed of, (b) the number of individual sales, (c) the income generated by the sales, (d) the total area of land disposed of over which public access has been formally protected and (e) the number of individual access agreements made on land disposed of, regarding land disposed of by the Forestry Commission since 1981.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 May 1993]: Between 27 July 1981 and 31 March 1993, the Forestry Commission sold 173,000 hectares of land, including woodlands and other land such as agricultural land and residential properties.

The sales included over 2,000 individual areas of forest land which are identified in lists held in the Library of the House; no central record is kept of the number of sales of agricultural land and residential properties.

The total income from all sales was £174 million.

The arrangements for securing continued public access to commission woodlands after sale, by way of prior agreements entered into between the Commission and local authorities, were introduced in October 1991. Most of the sales concluded since then were too far advanced in October 1991 to be considered for an access agreement, while most of the areas brought forward for disposal since that date have still to be sold. Access agreements have now been made with local authorities for five areas of commission land, one of which, covering 21 hectares, has been sold.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 20 April, Official Report, columns 89-90, what steps he has taken, or proposes to take, to publicise the name and address of the secretary to the forestry review group; and if he intends to encourage or invite the submission of expert evidence to the group from outside.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 May 1993]: Many individuals and organisations have already submitted useful comments and thoughts to the secretary to the forestry review group, whose name and address have been given coverage in the Official Report and the media.

Further submissions will continue to be welcomed and, as the work of the group progresses, there may be issues on which specific comment is invited; publicity will be arranged for these, as appropriate.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 March, Official Report, columns 276-78, to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley), if he will place in the Library a list by county and region of Forestry Commission land holdings greater than 1,000 hectares, giving the name, location and area.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 21 April 1993]: The Forestry Commission is preparing a list of its landholdings greater than 1,000 hectares and I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a copy as soon as possible and for further copies to be placed in the Library.

Cockburnspath Bypass

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the Strathclyde university study monitoring the wind levels over the newly constructed Cockburnspath bypass; and if he will make it his policy to publish the results when they are known in full.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The report of the Strathclyde university study of wind speeds on the new Cockburnspath bypass is expected to be submitted by the end of this year. The results will be made public.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for diversion of vehicles from the route of the newly constructed Cockburnspath bypass during abnormally high wind conditions; and what alternative roads would be used in any such diversion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 May 1993]: In common with other exposed section of trunk road, the embankment section of the new Cockburnspath bypass now has signs warning drivers of high-sided vehicles of the danger of crosswinds. A comparative study of the pattern of wind speeds and directions at this location and the nearby section of A1 at Thorntonloch is being undertaken by Strathclyde university and the results will determine a strategy for the use of automatically triggered diversion signs. In the event of their use, the diversion route will be along the former trunk road through Cockburnspath.

A1

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the currently identified parts of the A1 between Newcastle and Edinburgh which are identified as being subjected to abnormally high winds; and what the wind velocities are in such cases.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Sections of the A1 between Newcastle and Edinburgh which have been identified and signed as being subject to abnormal winds which can cause difficulties for drivers of high sided vehicles are:

(a) River Coquet Bridge, Felton Bypass;
(b) River Tweed Crossing, Berwick Bypass;
(c) Cockburnspath Bypass;
(d) Thorntonloch, north of Dunglass; and
(e) Dunbar Bypass.

The study of wind speed at Cockburnspath and Thorntonloch is ongoing and meaningful results are not yet available. Wind velocities have not been measured at the other locations.

Appointments

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the Scottish Tourist Board, the Higher Education Funding Council and the Scottish Sports Council the names of the chairman and board or council members, their occupation or profession and the allowances and remuneration payable in each case.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The information requested is given in the tables.

All the above appointments, except the chief executive, Scottish Homes, are held on a part-time basis. For Scottish Homes, the estimated time commitment is half a day per week for members, one and a half days per week for the deputy chairman and three days per week for the chairman. For the new town development corporations, the expected time commitment is half a day per week for members, one day per week for the deputy chairman and two days per week for the chairman.

Fords

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fords there are in Scotland where public roads cross watercourses; how many fatal or serious accidents have occurred in each of the last 10 years as a result of vehicles failing to negotiate water on fords on public roads; if he will list fords which have been closed to traffic following such accidents; and what is his Department's policy towards fords and the provision of warning to motorists when water conditions may be dangerous.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 May 1993]: Information is not held centrally as to the number of fords in Scotland on public roads, the number of fatal or serious accidents at fords, nor the number of fords closed to traffic following such accidents.

Roads authorities have a duty to manage and maintain the roads for which they are responsible, including any fords on these roads, to allow for the safe and convenient movement of traffic.

There are prescribed signs to warn of the existence of a ford and of the depth of water. Roads authorities are at liberty to instal such signs without seeking the Secretary of State's consent. Where it is felt that particular circumstances require further warning signs to be erected, roads authorities may seek the Secretary of State's authorisation for non-standard signs.

Examinations

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to introduce a more comprehensive system of moderation of the internal elements of examination under the auspices of the Scottish Vocational Education Council and the Scottish Examination Board; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 May 1993]: The Scottish Vocational Education Council and the Scottish Examination Board both give a high priority to the quality of external and internal assessment, and to moderation of their awards. They have in place quality assurance and review procedures to ensure that acceptable standards are maintained.

The Howie committee included in its report proposals for a quality assurance system to underpin the validity of the new Scottish upper secondary awards which it has recommended. The proposals contained in the Howie committee's report and all the comments received upon these propopals are under consideration.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to alter the continual assessment element of ScotVec qualifications; what representations he has had regarding the quality and acceptability of ScotVec modules; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 May 1993]: ScotVec qualifications are evolved in consultation with all interested parties and an independent review conducted by the Scottish Council for Research in Education in 1991 reported that employers favoured the assessment techniques used in ScotVec national certificate modules.

The success of the Scottish wider access programme in enabling students to enter higher education is evidence of acceptance of ScotVec's assessment methods and quality assurance. The Scottish Universities Council on Entrance, along with other national bodies, has also recently recognised groupings of ScotVec modules for entrance to higher education.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 April, Official Report, column 587, what plans he has to improve the structures and systems of accountability to elected local authorities by non-elected agencies and non-governmental organisations following his proposed reforms of the local government system in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 May 1993]: There are no plans to amend the present arrangements for ensuring the accountability of non-departmental public bodies in the context of the Government's proposals for local government reform in Scotland.

EDUCATION

Testing

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total cost, at the latest date for which figures are available, of (a) materials used or to be used in the scheduled standard assessment tasks for 1993 and (b) advertisements relating to testing and commending these tests to parents.

Mr. Forth: The total cost of producing and distributing all the materials for this year's tests of seven and 14-year-olds is estimated at £6·5 million. This is borne entirely by the School Examinations and Assessment Council. There is no direct cost to schools.

It is estimated that the cost of advertising the leaflet "How is Your Child Doing at School?" which provides information to parents about this summer's tests is £415,000.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education by what date he expects his policy in regard to standard assessment tasks to be fully operational.

Mr. Forth: I refer the right hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend made to the House on 11 May, Official Report, columns 651-60.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from secondary schools in Abingdon concerning the operation of his system of national testing of school pupils.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received various oral and written comments from secondary schools in Abingdon. These have concerned various aspects of the tests for 14-year-olds. The review being conducted by Sir Ron Dearing will consider such comments about the tests, with the aim of improving the assessment and testing arrangements in the future.

Teachers' Dispute, Wandsworth

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was his response to the letter of 23 April from the National Association of Schoolmasters/Union of Women Teachers requesting a meeting to discuss the dispute between the union and the London borough of Wandsworth.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend's private secretary replied on his behalf on 30 April. She advised the NASUWT that it should make its concerns and views known to Sir Ron Dearing who is conducting a review of the national curriculum and assessment arrangements. She said that meanwhile there was no justification for abandoning this summer's tests or for a boycott of the tests, which would damage pupils' education and hamper the achievement of a more streamlined curriculum and assessment framework.

Higher Education

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of students entering higher education for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The table gives the number of first-year students on higher education courses at publicly funded higher education institutions in Great Britain from 1979 onwards. It includes both UK and overseas domiciled students.

Academic Year	Student numbers (000s)
1979	327·4
1980	340·4
1981	355·4
1982	356·9
1983	365·4
1984	370·3
1985	391·2
1986	410·3
1987	415·4
1988	438·3
1989	473·2
1991	587·3

The number of students in higher education has expanded even faster than the rate of growth envisaged in the 1991 higher education White Paper. Over one in four young people were entering higher education in 1992. Government spending plans provide for an increase of 104,000 or 13 per cent. in higher education student numbers during the next three years. This will allow the current record levels of participation to be maintained and give institutions a period during which to consolidate their recent achievements.

Special Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many pupils in (a) England and (b) each local education authority are educated in (i) local authority-maintained special schools, (ii) non-maintained special schools and (iii) independent special schools;

(2) how many pupils in (a) England and (b) each local education authority have boarding places in (i) local authority-maintained special schools, (ii) non-maintained special schools and (iii) independent special schools.

Mr. Forth: The information requested for maintained and non-maintained special schools is shown in the table.

Information on independent special schools can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Number of pupils and boarding pupils in maintained and non-maintained special schools for each LEA in England (including hospital special and general hospital schools).

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average annual cost of (a) boarding and (b) day places in (i) local authority-maintained special schools, (ii) non-maintained special schools and (iii) independent special schools.

Mr. Forth: This information is not collected centrally.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many applications for grant-maintained status have been approved since 1 December 1992 (a) without modification and (b) with modification in respect of (i) admission numbers, (ii) admission policy and (iii) incorporation date.

Mr. Forth: Since 1 December 1992, 70 applications for grant-maintained status have been approved without modification, and 118 with modification. Of this latter group, 26 applications were approved with modification in respect of admission numbers, 95 in respect of admission policy, and 10 in respect of incorporation date. Some applications were approved with more than one modification.

Disabled People

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by local education authority the number of (a) teachers, (b) nursery nurses and (c) teachers' aides employed who are disabled.

Mr. Boswell: The information requested is not centrally recorded.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mongolia

15. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new proposals he has to improve relations with Mongolia.

Mr. Goodlad: Relations with Mongolia are very good. January marked the 30th anniversary of the establishment of our diplomatic relations. This year has seen the introduction of a bilateral aid programme for Mongolia of £2·7 million over the next three years. This is aimed at helping the Mongolians with their economic reform programme, being carried out in the face of considerable hardship. A bilateral round table meeting is scheduled for this October in London.

Somalia

16. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The deployment of foreign troops has radically improved the relief situation, although security remains a major problem. Somali military factions have agreed to a ceasefire, disarmament and the formation of a transitional government.

Yugoslavia

17. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about developments in Bosnia and the Balkans.

19. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in former Yugoslavia.

28. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Bosnia.

34. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European Community counterparts on the conflict in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Government policy on Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The rejection of the Vance-Owen peace plan by the Bosnian Serb Assembly is a serious set-back but should not be seen as the last word on the agreement. We are pursuing a twin-track policy: to continue planning for implementation of the plan, while at the same time increasing pressure on the Serbs to accept and implement the peace plan and to desist from further attacks. We are already intensifying sanctions, and are consulting closely with our partners and allies on the possibility of stronger measures if the Serbs do not comply.

A political settlement in Bosnia would ease tensions in the region and reduce the risk of possible spillover into other parts of the former Yugoslavia.

20. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of sanctions against Serbia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sanctions are having an increasingly harsh effect on the Serbian economy. Inflation is running at over 225 per cent per month. Over 70 per cent of the work force are unemployed or idle. Per capita gross domestic product has fallen to the 1969 level and severe shortages are apparent in all sectors of the economy. The provisions of United Nations Security Council resolution 820 and the tighter enforcement measures being taken will have a major impact on the effectiveness of the sanctions regime.

37. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken to ensure the release of the women held in Bosnian rape camps; if he will initiate steps to have rape classified as a war crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 27 April Official Report, column 372. Rape is already a war crime since it is specifically prohibited by article 27 of the fourth Geneva convention.

Middle East

18. Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest developments in the middle east peace negotiations.

21. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the middle east peace process.

35. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards a peace settlement between the Palestinians and the Israeli Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The bilateral negotiations between Israel and the Arab parties resumed in Washington on 27 April. We welcome the resumption. We continue to urge the parties to negotiate seriously to produce early visible progress towards lasting settlement on the basis of United Nations Security Council resolutions 242 and 338.

Denmark (Referendum)

22. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for avoiding the isolation of Denmark in the event of a second no vote in its referendum.

Mr. Hurd: We do not expect the Danes to vote no.

Japan

23. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom/Japanese relations.

Mr. Goodlad: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs confirmed during his visit to Japan on 6 to 7 April, relations between the United Kingdom and Japan are excellent. We are maintaining a high level of ministerial contact so as to develop our co-operation in all fields including political dialogue, trade, investment, science and technology and broader cultural and educational exchanges.

30. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Japanese Foreign Minister to discuss bilateral relations.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met the new Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr. Kabun Muto, on 7 April during his visit to Tokyo. He had also met on 6 April the acting Foreign Minister, Mr. Yohei Kono, and had with him a fruitful discussion on how to develop further the excellent bilateral relationship between the United Kingdom and Japan.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the Cyprus issue with the Turkish Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Cetin in London on 23 November, he made clear our expectation that Turkey would use her significant influence to encourage the Turkish Cypriot community to work actively towards a settlement to the dispute. We use every opportunity to reiterate to the Turks our desire for a solution to the Cyprus problem and will do so again in the run-up to the resumed intercommunal talks in New York on 24 May.

Iran

24. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with members of the Government of Iran concerning hostages and detained persons in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last met the Iranian Foreign Minister, Dr. Velayati, in New York on 25 September 1992. He met the Iranian chargé d'affaires in London on 26 January 1993 and I met him on 5 May 1993. The Iranian Government are well aware of our views on hostages.

Open Government

25. Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution he expects to make to the open government initiative.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster told the House on 12 March, we will be publishing a White Paper on openness during the present Session. I have no wish to anticipate its recommendations.

Sudan

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy on the current troubles in Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A root cause of the misery in Sudan is the civil war. We welcome the reconvening of peace talks under the auspices of the Nigerian Government and are discussing with our EC partners, the US and others what further the international community can do to alleviate the suffering.

We shall maintain strong pressure on the Government of Sudan to improve their performance in areas of concern to us, especially human rights and the alleviation of the humanitarian crisis. We were one of the first to respond at the outset of the present crisis in November 1990, and have since then committed over £63 million in humanitarian aid. This makes us one of the leading donors to Sudan.

Eritrea

29. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards Eritrea following its referendum.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We warmly welcome the outcome of the referendum on Eritrea's status. United Nations observers have confirmed their satisfaction with the process. This opens the way for recognition of Eritrea. The Eritreans have announced that their independence will be formally declared on 24 May. Accordingly, we plan to announce our decision on recognition by that date.

Cyprus

31. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to encourage an amicable resolution on the island of Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation in Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Nations Secretary-General held a formal meeting with the leaders of the two Cypriot communities in New York on 30 March. The two leaders expressed their willingness to resume talks in New York on 24 May and to use the "Set of Ideas" for the purpose of reaching a mutually acceptable overall framework agreement. We continue to give vigorous support to the United Nations initiative.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish Government, and when this was last done, regarding the number of settlers from mainland Turkey now moving to northern Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The questions of settlement and property rights in Cyprus are intrinsic to the UN "Set of Ideas", endorsed by the Security Council as the basis of a settlement. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last urged Turkey at the highest level to support the "Set of Ideas" when he met Mr. Demirel and Mr. Cetin on 23 November. We keep in close touch with the Turkish Government, and make our views clear, through Her Majesty's ambassadors in Ankara and elsewhere.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when ministers or officials of his Department last met opposition leaders of political parties operating in northern Cyprus; when such meetings took place; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been 13 meetings between officials and Turkish Cypriot "opposition" leaders in the last three months, including a guest of Government visit by Mustafa Akinci in London on 24 March. Discussions included the negotiations towards a settlement of the Cyprus problem and the situation in north Cyprus.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's estimate of the number of people who have migrated from Turkey to northern Cyprus in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Goodlad: We do not compile such statistics.

Russia

33. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Foreign Minister of the Russian Federation to discuss the current political situation in Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed European political issues with Mr. Kozyrev when he met him in Moscow in April. They have since discussed these issues by telephone.

UN Peace Operations

38. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in how many countries, and in which, there are currently United Nations peacekeeping or peace monitoring operations.

39. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in how many countries United Nations peacekeeping or peace monitoring units are operating.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are 12 current United Nations peacekeeping or monitoring missions:
UNTSO—The UN Truce Supervision Organisation
UNDOF—The UN Disengagement Observer Force
UNIFIL—The UN Interim Force in Lebanon
UNMOGIP—The UN Monitoring Organisation India/Pakistan
UNFICYP—The UN Force in Cyprus
ONUSAL—The UN Missions in El Salvador
UNAVEM—The UN Angola Verification Mission
MINURSO—The UN Referendum Monitory Mission in Western Sahara
UNIKOM—The UN Iraq/Kuwait Observer Mission
UNTAC—The UN Transitional Authority in Cambodia
UNPROFOR—The UN Protection Force (Former Yugoslavia)
ONUMOZ—The UN Operation in Mozambique
A deployment is also underway to UNOSOM II which will take over from UNITAF—the Unified Task Force—in Somalia.

Angola

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present situation in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Talks between the Government of Angola and UNITA continue under United Nations auspices in Abidjan. We continue to support the UN in its efforts to bring the two parties to agreement on a ceasefire, full implementation of the Bicesse peace accords, and free access throughout the country for much-needed humanitarian aid.

Brazil

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Brazilian Government about their 1988 constitutional commitment to demarcate lands for their Indian population within a five-year period.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in regular touch with the Brazilian authorities about the rights of the indigenous peoples of Brazil. They are fully aware of our concern. In February this year, the Brazilian Minister of Justice publicly reconfirmed his intention to complete the demarcation of the lands of Brazil's indigenous peoples by October 1993 in compliance with Brazil's 1988 constitution.

Human Rights

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to raise the rights of indigenous peoples in Brazil at the United Nations conference on human rights in Vienna.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The aims of the United Kingdom delegation at the United Nations conference on human rights in Vienna will be to promote universal adherence to existing standards, to explore ways to improve their implementation and to examine the relationship between human rights, democracy and development. The rights of the indigenous peoples in Brazil will be for consideration under item 11 of the agenda: "Consideration of contemporary trends in and new challenges to the full realisation of all human rights of women and men, including those of persons belonging to vulnerable groups".

European Treaties

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the proposed names for the treaties comprising (a) the current treaty of Rome, as amended, with the contents of titles II, III and IV of the treaty on European union signed at Maastricht and (b) titles I, V, VI and VII of the treaty on European union signed at Maastricht.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Following the entry into force of the treaty on European union, four treaties will be in force:
(a) the treaty establishing the European Community ("The EC Treaty") i.e., the present treaty of Rome as amended by title II of the treaty on European union;
(b) the treaty establishing the European Coal and Steel Community ("The ECSC Treaty") as amended by title III of the treaty on European union;
(c) the treaty establishing the European Atomic Energy Community ("The EURATOM treaty") as amended by title IV of the treaty on European union;
(d) the treaty on European union itself, in its entirety.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disabled People

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what liaison has taken place between the Benefits Agency and organisations representing the disabled in (a) Wales and (b) England.

Mr. Scott: The operation of the Benefits Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Mr. Michael Bichard. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Llew Smith, dated 11 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what liaison has taken place between the Benefits Agency and organisations representing the disabled in (a) Wales and (b) England.

The Agency is committed to an equal opportunities policy. For our customers with disabilities, this means that wherever possible we will ensure that their dealings with us should not be limited by reason of their disabilities.

In Wales, our staff have had a good deal of contact with organisations representing people with disabilities, much of it at local level. A review of our customer service across Wales was held in October 1992, attended by many organisations (including several representing the needs of people with disabilities in Wales). We have also run a one day seminar jointly with the Wales Council for the Blind, aimed at carers and people with disabilities. With the introduction of the new disability benefits last year, a bilingual English/Welsh cassette was produced for blind customers, and was distributed through talking newspapers and to all Social Service Departments in Wales.

A series of "roadshows" using our own Benefit Bus and the Wales Council for the Disabled WCD advice and information bus took place during February of this year, at 10 locations throughout Wales. Following this, a series of one day seminars, organised jointly by the Agency and by the council, have been held. They were attended by our own customer service staff in Wales, and by representatives from relevant organisations. A member of our staff was seconded to the council last year for 10 months.

Nationally, we liaise and meet regularly with a number of organisations representing the needs of people with disabilities. These include the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, the Royal National Institute for the Blind, People First, and the National Schizophrenia Society. We are looking at a number of their services with a view to publicising them through our network of District Information Officers and Customer Service Managers in local benefit offices. We also liaise regularly with a number of other customer organisations, including the National Association of Citizen's Advice Bureau (NACAB).

I meet senior staff from NACAB six monthly.

As the Agency's customer charter makes clear, we are committed to providing a service which is accessible for all our customers. We recognise that disabled people may have particular needs and we will continue to look for ways to make our services easier to use. One way in which we intend to meet this commitment is through a national forum to enable organisations representing or comprising people with disabilities to contribute to the Agency's ongoing work to improve services for disabled customers. The first meeting took place last September. That first, very informal meeting, was mainly, but not exclusively, about the disability benefits. A second meeting took place on 5 May this year. The forum will continue twice yearly whilst there is the demand.

A small group of organisations have also met with the Agency to discuss how to improve access to our public areas. The outcome is that we are redrafting and improving accommodation guidance for District and Unit Managers.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Young People, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds living in the Durham area are not in full-time education and are not entitled to benefit.

Mr. Burt: The administration of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Mr. M. Bichard to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 11 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17 year olds living in the Durham area are not in full-time education and are not entitled to benefit.

This information is not available in the format requested except at a disproportionate cost. This is because the Benefits Agency does not keep statistics relating to disallowed claims by age of applicant. However, I have appended information relating to the number of successful applications for Severe Hardship payments made in the Benefits Agency's North Durham and South Durham Districts during February and March 1993. This information does not equate exactly to the number of individuals in receipt of a Severe Hardship payment, since an individual may have made more than one application during the period. Additionally, directions to make Severe Hardship payments normally last eight weeks, so some of these directions may not now be current.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances compensation is payable in respect of delays in handling claims for mobility allowance; and how many times these have arisen between 31 October 1992 and 31 March 1993.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on Tuesday 4 May, at column 10.

Between 31 October 1992 and 31 March 1993, around 50 cases have been dealt with as a result of the delays in handling mobility allowance claims.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maternity Services

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the hospitals in Northern Ireland which had consultant obstetric and/or general practitioner maternity beds in 1991-92 and 1992-93, with the numbers of beds of each type in each hospital in each year.

Mr. Hanley: The average numbers of available beds in the obstetrics and general practitioner maternity specialities in Northern Ireland in 1991-92 and the period from 1 April 1992 to 31 December 1992 are as follows:

Housing Construction, Newtownards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when planning application No. X/92/0120 by Braemar Construction for seven dwellings at the rear of Beverley Court, Newtownards was received; when neighbour notification notices were issued; why no neighbour notification notice was issued to the occupier of 3 Beverley Court; what opinion Ards borough council expressed; when planning approval was issued; when work commenced on site; when the planning officer received a letter of 24 February from Mr. Robert Groves of 3 Beverley Court about this; and when a full reply to the letter will be issued.

Mr. Atkins: The application was received on 13 February 1992. Neighbour notification notices were issued on 18 February 1992 and the Department's records show that a notice was sent to "The Occupier of No. 3 Beverley Court". The application was presented to Ards borough council at its meeting of 22 June 1992 with an opinion to approve. The council agreed with this opinion and approval issued on 19 July 1992; the divisional planning office has no record of when work started. Mr. Groves' letter of 24 February 1993 was received by the divisional planning office on 26 February 1993. The matters raised required a site survey and a reply was issued on 6 May 1993.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the actions under (a) fair employment legislation and (b) equal opportunities legislation, which have been successfully defended by (i) Government Departments, (ii) education boards, (iii) health boards, (iv) local authorities and (v) other public bodies, indicating in each case whether the unsuccessful applicant was supported by the Fair Employment Agency or Fair Employment Commission or Equal Opportunities Commission and the costs incurred by the successful respondent in cases where there was such support.

Mr. Atkins: Information on actions under sex discrimination legislation prior to 1 January 1990 is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Individual complaints of religious discrimination before 1 January 1990 were brought under the procedure in the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1976 and were not defended as such or prosecuted by either party; instead the Fair Employment Agency acted as an impartial investigator. Under the 1976 Act a total of 593 findings were made on foot of individual complaints, of which 496 were findings of no unlawful discrimination. Details as to the respondent in these cases could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information relating to actions brought since 1 January 1990 under the Fair Employment (NI) Act and the Sex Discrimination (NI) Order 1976 is as follows:

Civil Servants

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants currently in the Northern Ireland Office have been seconded or transferred from (a) the Foreign Office, (b) the Home Office and (c) the Ministry of Defence; and what their rank was before such move and their current rank.

Mr. Mates: Four have been seconded on loan or transferred from the Foreign Office, 18 from the Home Office and 10 from the Ministry of Defence.

Their grades are as follows:

Transport Holding Company

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to privatise the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company; what estimate of asset proceeds he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There are no plans to privatise the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company.

School Pupils

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the number of pupils at each of (a) maintained primary schools, (b) maintained secondary schools, (c) maintained grammar schools, (d) controlled primary schools, (e) controlled secondary schools and (f) controlled grammar schools, in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland for the last five years.

Ulster Young Militants

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will proscribe the Ulster Young Militants; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The question of whether certain organisations should be proscribed is kept under review. The fact that a particular organisation may not be proscribed confers no immunity from prosecution in respect of substantive criminal acts which it or its members may commit.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the truck cargo heavy duty II vehicles used by his Department comply with the International Atomic Energy Agency Safety Series No. 6 Regulations 1985, as amended in 1990.

Mr. Aitken: The International Atomic Energy Agency Safety Series No. 6 Regulations 1985, as amended in 1990, apply primarily to the containers or packaging used for the safe transport of radioactive material. In formulating safety procedures for nuclear warhead transport, full account is taken of national and international civil regulations on transport of radioactive materials, where relevant.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what prior warnings of the hazard and effects of the incapacitating agent BZ were given to service personnel who were tested with this agent by his Department; in which years these tests were carried out; how many service personnel were tested with the agent; and which regiments or branches of the United Kingdom armed services these personnel were from;

(2) on what date information about CR gas was first passed from the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence to the United States Department of Defense; in what form this information was passed; and if this information was passed under the terms of the technical co-operation programme;

(3) on what date the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence received the last quantity of nerve agent VX from the United States Department of Defense; which United States Department of Defense establishment supplied the quantity of nerve gas; what safety precautions were taken during the transfer of the nerve agent; and which United States safety authorities, British safety authorities and British local councils were informed beforehand of the transfer of this nerve agent;

(4) how the workings of the basic standardisation agreement between the British, American and Canadian armies were affected by the British decision to give up offensive work on chemical and biological weapons;

(5) how often the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Canada have met under the terms of the 1980 memorandum of understanding on chemical and biological defence; and what were the dates and locations of each of these meetings;

(6) what tests and studies his Department has carried out using the organism pasteurella tularensis; when and where these experiments took place; and if the results of this scientific activity were exchanged with the United States of America, Canada or Australia;

(7) how many scientific papers co-authored by scientists from the chemical and biological establishment at Porton Down and their counterparts in the United States of America military have been published since 1979; what were the dates of these papers; and in which scientific journals they were published;

(8) what experiments his Department has carried out on the chemical agent phencyclidine; when and where the experiments were carried out; and if the results of the experiments were exchanged with the United States of America, Canada or Australia;

(9) what stocks of toxins have been transferred from the United States of America Department of Defence to the Ministry of Defence or British scientific research institutions since 1979; from which United States of America Department of Defence establishments these toxins have been transferred; and under which international defence agreements these toxins have been transferred.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: These are matters for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (CBDE) under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what prior warnings of the hazard and effects of the incapacitating agent BZ were given to service personnel who were tested with this agent by his Department; in which years these tests were carried out; how many service personnel were tested with the agent; and which regiments or branches of the United Kingdom armed services these personnel were from (Question 2, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. This work includes the evaluation of the potential hazard of possible agents such as the incapacitating agent BZ.

3. The Service volunteers in the studies involving BZ came from all branches of the Armed Services in response to a request for volunteers to participate in studies at the then Chemical Defence Experimental Establishment. The volunteers were informed that the purpose of the tests was to assess the effects of a potential agent which might affect their behaviour. Volunteers were screened for normality by a resident Army Psychiatrist on arrival at Porton Down and checked again after the study. These studies were carried out in the mid 1960s. It would involve a disproportionate amount of effort to determine which regiments or branches of the Armed Forces these personnel were from.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him on what date information about CR gas was first passed from the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence to the United States Department of Defense; in what form this information was passed; and if this information was passed under the terms of The Technical Co-operation Programme (Question 5, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of that programme evaluation is carried out of chemicals that may be used by an aggressor. Research into CR gas at the then Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down commenced in 1962. The information gained in the research programme during the subsequent years has formed part of the chemical and biological defence programme which has been the subject of information exchange and collaboration with the United States Department of Defense on a continuing basis. This information was exchanged under the aegis of the defence agreements referred to by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, the Rt. Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP, in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, Columns 255-256 which include the Technical Co-operation Programme. A report written in 1962 was provided to the United States Department of Defense under the terms of this Programme. It is not possible to be more precise about the form in which the information was exchanged and when as we do not maintain records in a way that enables us to readily access this information.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993 :

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him on what date the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence received the last quantity of nerve agent VX from the United States Department of Defense, which United States Department of Defense establishment supplied the quantity of nerve gas; what safety precautions were taken during the transfer of the nerve agent: and which United States safety authorities, British safety authorities and British local councils were informed beforehand of the transfer of this nerve agent (Question 6, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of the materials which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor.

3. The last transfer of VX from the United States of America took place in June 1967 for a collaborative trial at Porton Down on downwind hazard evaluation and the material was provided and shipped by Edgewood Arsenal, Maryland. The transfer took place by US military aircraft into Mildenhall, Suffolk. The material was shipped in a sealed container as a Class A poison under the regulations prescribed by the interstate Commerce Commission and the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency. The shipment was escorted by a 3 man escort equipped with protective clothing and detection and decontamination equipment. It was then transferred to the then Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down by road convoy in accordance with the regulations in force at the time in the United Kingdom. These would have included notifying the relevant Police Forces of the operation and the provision of additional escorts, including a police vehicle. Safety precautions were applied to this transfer in accordance with the appropriate standards at that time.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him how the workings of the Basic Standardisation Agreement between the British, American and Canadian armies were affected by the British decision to give up offensive work on chemical and biological weapons (Question 8, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The Basic Standardisation Agreement between the American, British and Canadian armies promotes co-operation and interoperability through standardisation amongst the armies of the three Nations. As the agreement is a broad one and is not specific to chemical and biological aspects, the effect of the UK decision to give up offensive work on chemical and biological weapons was that such UK information ceased to be produced and could not be exchanged.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him how often the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Canada have met under the terms of the 1980 Memorandum of Understanding on Chemical and Biological Defence; and what were the dates and locations of each of these meetings (Question 9, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The aim of the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) on Chemical and Biological Defence is to integrate the programmes of the three countries to the maximum possible extent. The Steering Group under the MOU meets annually whilst the Programme Officers and Requirements Officers meet at six monthly intervals. In addition, experts from the three countries meet under the aegis of the MOU to address specific topics on an as required basis.

3. The Steering Group meets in rotation usually at the headquarters of the respective Departments of Defence. The Group has met twelve times as follows:

Date	Location
30 June 1981	United States of America
23 March 1983	United Kingdom
11 April 1984	Canada
24 September 1984	United Kingdom
21 November 1985	United States of America
5 June 1986	Canada
24 September 1987	United Kingdom
18 November 1988	United States of America
6 October 1989	United Kingdom
12 October 1990	Canada
25 October 1991	United States of America
24 November 1992	United Kingdom

4. The Programme Officers and Requirement Officers (PRO/RO) of each of the three countries meet at six monthly intervals in one of the countries in turn. These meetings usually take place at the respective chemical and biological defence establishments ie. the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down, the Defence Research Establishment at Suffield, Canada, and the United States Army Chemical and Biological Defense Command at Edgewood, Maryland. The dates of these meetings were as follows:

Date	Location
17 December 1980	United Kingdom
21-22 October 1981	United Kingdom
	United States of America
3-8 June 1982	Canada
13-14 October 1982	United Kingdom
21-23 March 1983	United Kingdom
26-27 May 1983	United States of America
9-10 April 1984	Canada
11-12 September 1984	United States of America
11-13 March 1985	United Kingdom
1-3 October 1985	Canada
17-19 March 1986	United States of America
29 September-1 October 1986	United Kingdom
27-29 April 1987	Canada
9-11 September 1987	United States of America
22-24 March 1988	United Kingdom
27-29 September 1988	Canada
3-5 April 1989	United States of America
19-21 September 1989	United Kingdom
30 April-2 May 1990	Canada
18-20 September 1990	United States of America
19-21 March 1991	United Kingdom
10-12 September 1991	Canada
24-26 March 1992	United States of America
15-17 September 1992	United Kingdom
23-25 March 1993	Canada

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what tests and studies his Department has carried out using the organism pasteurella tularensis; when and where these experiments took place; and if the results of this scientific activity were exchanged with the United States of America, Canada and Australia (Question 10, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Tests and studies on the organism Pasteurella tularensis (now known as Francisella tularensis) have been carried out since the early 1950s by the then Microbiological Research Department, subsequently by the Microbiological Research Establishment, Porton Down until its closure in 1979 and since then by the Chemical Defence Establishment, now the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down. Whilst some of the initial work had relevance to the feasibility of a retaliatory biological warfare capability, all offensive work ceased in the late 1950s and since then work on this organism has been in support of the programme to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat the biological weapons may be used against them.

3. The information gained has been the subject of information exchange and collaboration with the United States of America, Canada and Australia on a continuing basis. This information was exchanged under the aegis of the defence agreements referred to by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, The Right Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP, in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-256.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him how many scientific papers co-authored by scientists from the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down and their counterparts in the United States of America military have been published since 1979; what were the dates of these papers; and which scientific journals they were published (Question 11, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. Our records show that the following scientific papers have been co-authored by scientists from the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down and our counterparts in the United States of America defense establishments since 1979;

a. Identification of encapsulated and non-encapsulated Yersinia pestis by immunofluorescence tests using polyclonal and monoclonal antibodies.
Epidem Ire nf. 101, (1988), 59-73

b. An investigation of possible models for the production of progressive pulmonary fibrosis in the rat. The effects of repeated intratracheal instillation of bleomycin.
Toxicology, 51, (1988), 101-110.

c. A model for carbamate and organophosphate-induced enemiis in humans.
Neuroscience and Biobehavoural Reviews, Vol. 15, (1991), pp 179-184.

d. Identification of Bacillus anthracis by polyclonal antibodies against extracted vegetative cell antigens.
Journal of Applied Bacteriology, 66, (1989), 419-432.

e. Detection of Spores of Bacillus anthracis using the Polymerase Chain Reaction.
Journal of Infectious Diseases, 165 (1992), 1145-8.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what experiments his Department has carried out on the chemical agent phencyclidine; when and where the experiments were carried out; and if the results of the experiments were exchanged with the United States of America, Canada or Australia (Question 12, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to carry out research to ensure that the UK Armed Forces are provided with effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As part of this work the potential hazard of possible chemical and biological warfare agents is assessed and the effectiveness of British protective measures evaluated.

3. Research into phencyclidine at the then Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down started in 1963 with a study to assess the behavioural effects of phencyclidine in rats and to compare the results with other Psychotomimetics including LSD. The information gained has formed part of the chemical and biological defence programme which has been the subject of information exchange and collaboration with the United States Department of Defense on a continuing basis. This information was exchanged under the aegis of the defence agreements referred to by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, The Rt. Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP, in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-256.

Letter from G. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 12 May 1993:

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking him what stocks of toxins have been transferred from the United States of America Department of Defense to the Ministry of Defence or British scientific research institutions since 1979; from which United States of America Department of Defense establishments these toxins have been transferred; and under which international defence agreements these toxins have been transferred (Question 13, Order Paper 4 May 1993) has been passed to me to reply as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the UK Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. In order to carry out this work, it is necessary to have available small quantities of the materials which may be used as chemical or biological warfare agents by a potential aggressor.

3. Since 1979 a small quantity of shellfish toxin has been received from the US Army Chemical Research, Development and Engineering Center at Edgewood, Maryland as well as a small quantity of Clostridium perfringens beta-toxin from the US Army Medical Research Institute for Infectious Diseases. The quantities in both cases were extremely small and would not be regarded as stocks of toxins. These transfers from the United States of America Department of Defense to the Ministry of Defence and more specifically the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down took place under the defence agreements referred to by the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, The Rt. Hon. Archie Hamilton, MP in his reply of 21 May 1992, Official Report, columns 255-256.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the work of the quadrupartite working party on nuclear biological and chemical defence of the United Kingdom—United States of America—Canada—Australia Armies agreement since 1978; on which dates and locations the working party has met; and which Ministry of Defence branches took part in these meetings.

Mr. Aitken: The quadripartite working party meets to negotiate and maintain agreements on standardisation of operational procedures and equipment.

Dates and locations of QWP meetings since 1978 are as follows:

Date	Location
8–17 May 1978	Canada
30 October–8 November 1979	United States of America
12-21 May 1981	United Kingdom
3–9 November 1982	Australia
11–17 June 1984	Canada
12–18 November 1985	United States of America
17–23 June 1987	United Kingdom
19–25 October 1988	Australia
30 May–5 June 1990	Canada
8–15 October 1991	Australia
21–27 April 1993	United Kingdom

Representatives of the following branches of my Department have attended the quadripartite working party:

Operational Requirements Branches: most recently, Director Operational Requirements (Joint Systems) and Director Clothing and Textiles.

Researches Branches: Atomic Weapons Establishment and Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

Army policy/concepts Branch: Director Doctrine Army now Director Land Warfare.
Procurement Executive Branch: most recently, Programme Director Light weapons systems.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when information about the L9A1 hand-held aerosol dispenser was exchanged between Britain and other countries under the defence agreements outlined in the Official Report, 21 May 1992, columns 255-56.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No such exchange took place.

Battle of the Atlantic (Anniversary)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to visit Merseyside during the 50th anniversary of the battle of the Atlantic and the western approaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend plans to visit Merseyside at the end of the month to attend events commemorating the 50th anniversary of the battle of the Atlantic.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to what the operational sortie requirements were for the Royal Air Force rescue helicopter that flew very low over the village of Clayton, south Yorkshire at approximately 15.48 hours on 25 April.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The search-and-rescue (SAR) Sea King helicopter from RAF Leconfield was returning to the station from a call-out in Morcambe bay. As the aircraft was on standby to provide SAR cover in the area, and because of the prevailing low cloud, the crew were routed to the north of Sheffield and authorised to fly at low level.

Nuclear Weapons, Tibet

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as regards (a) the testing and (b) deployment of nuclear weapons in Tibet by China.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no evidence that China has tested or deployed nuclear weapons in Tibet.

Confidence and Security Building

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current total of inspections carried out by the United Kingdom as part of the confidence and security-building measures agreements; which countries have been visited; what problems have occurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have carried out 10 confidence and security-building measures evaluations and three inspections. The evaluations were conducted in the then Soviet Union, Romania, Poland, Bulgaria, Belarus, and Ukraine, with inspections in Belarus and Russia. Although there have been on occasions some minor logistical difficulties, no problems of substance have arisen.

Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many practice inspections have been carried out by the United Kingdom as part of the preparation for the full implementation of the conventional forces in Europe treaty; what problems have arisen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Twenty-one practice inspections have been carried out by the United Kingdom. Although there have been on occasion some teething difficulties, no problems of substance have arisen.

Military Information (Exchanges)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what exchanges of military information have occurred as a result of the signing of the Vienna document in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As a result of the signing of the Vienna document in 1990, and its successor Vienna document in 1992, three exchanges of military information have taken place. These consist of the command organisation and location of land and air forces, including personnel and equipment holdings, as well as plans for the deployment of new equipment and weapon systems in the following 12 months.

Belize

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to changing the level of British forces in Belize.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are in consultation with the Government of Belize about the British military presence there. The British Government expect to make a statement shortly.

Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what type of training has been given to units due to be deployed for duties with UNPROFOR II; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Extensive refresher training in basic skills is undertaken by any unit preparing to undertake an emergency tour. In the case of 1st Prince of Wales Own Battalion group, additional specialised training included route clearing and anti-ambush drills, convoy control and driving techniques. Some basic language training as well as briefing on the background to the conflict were also included.

Negretti Aviation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts have been let with Negretti Aviation in the last three years.

Mr. Aitken: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Total number of contracts	Total value of contracts
1992-93	88	£6,567,649
1991-92	84	£4,449,184
1990-91	67	£1,556,308

Details of the subject matter of individual contracts are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Aerospace Equipment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regard he pays in his defence procurement policy to the preservation of a defence industrial base capable of producing defence aerospace equipment.

Mr. Aitken: We believe it is important to retain a viable and effective defence industry, in aerospace as in other sectors, and our procurement policy has achieved this. We give due weight in procurement decisions to their wider industrial and technological implications.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representation his Department had at the first preparatory committee meeting in New York on 10 to 14 May for the fifth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department is being represented at official level.

Amphibious Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department has made in assessing the tenders for the amphibious helicopter carrier.

Mr. Aitken: I refer my hon. Friend to the pursuant reply I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) yesterday.

EMPLOYMENT

School Leavers

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for each year since 1988 the number of pupils in Greater London reaching the minimum school leaving age and the number who entered employment directly, entered a youth training scheme on leaving school, returned for a further period at school, or entered a further education college; and if she will provide such estimates as are available for the same figures for 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is compiled by United Kingdom heads of careers services on behalf of the careers service. It is given in the table. This information is not yet available for 1992 and 1993. Information for 1988 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Numbers of pupils leaving secondary school at minimum school leaving age in inner and outer London and their destinations for the years 1989-91

	1989	1990	1991
Full-time education	32,790	31,800	38,200
Youth training[1]	4,050	3,070	2,920
Employment	12,550	9,030	4,520
Not in any[2]	3,180	4,300	6,260
Unknown[3]	8,490	6,130	6,050
Total	60,620	54,160	57,950

Source: School Leavers' Destinations Survey.
Figures rounded to nearest 10.
[1] Including those on YT with employed status and those using training credits.
[2] May be unemployed or not available for work for any of a wide range of reasons.
[3] Those who failed to let the careers service or school know what they were doing and who failed to respond to at least two attempts at follow-up by the careers office.

EDUCATION

Infant Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many four-year-olds were in classes in infant schools in England, excluding four-year-olds in nursery classes of infant schools or in nursery schools in 1987 and 1991; and what percentage this was of the age group.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is given in the table.

Pupils aged 4 attending infant classes in maintained infant schools in England.
Position as at January each year.

	Number of pupils aged four[1]	As a percentage of the four year old population[2]
1987	71,025	18
1991	76,703	18

[1] Ages as at previous 31 August—excluding the rising fives who by January will have reached the age of five.
[2] Based on the estimated four-year-old population as at previous 31 August—again excluding the rising fives.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) when he intends to complete his consideration of the responses to his consultation letter on the sale of school playing fields;

(2) if he will publish a full list of the organisations and individuals to whom his consultation letter on the sale of school playing fields was sent, the date on which the letter was sent to each organisation and individual and the date on which a response from each organisation and individual was received by his Department; and if he will place copies of each response in the Library;

(3) how many organisations have not responded to his consultation letter on the sale of school playing fields; what action he has taken to pursue those organisations for responses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend expects to inform local education authorities and others of his conclusions arising from this exercise shortly.

My hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins), then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, wrote to the local authority associations on 19 December 1991 asking for their comments on his proposed letter to chief education officers by 28 February 1992. Copies of the consultation letter were also sent on 20 December 1991 to the Sports Council, the Central Council of Physical Recreation, the National Playing Fields Association and the regional councils for sport and recreation for information.

Following is a list of the bodies which commented on the consultation letter and the dates of their replies:

	Date
Association of District Councils	26 February 1992
Association of Metropolitan Authorities	February 1992
Association of County Councils	February 1992
Association of London Authorities	24 February 1992
The Sports Council	28 February 1992
National Playing Fields Association	5 March 1992
The Central Council of Physical Recreation	16 January 1992
Chiltern District Council	13 February 1992
Cornwall County Council	25 February 1992
Dorset County Council	26 February 1992
ACRE: The Rural Communities Charity	28 February 1992
Somerset County Council	4 March 1992

It is not our normal practice to place responses to consultations in the Library.

No response was received from the London Boroughs Association. My hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble wrote to the chairman of the association, on 19 December 1991, and a further copy of his letter was sent to the association on 6 February 1992. Officials subsequently telephoned the association to ask whether a response would be forthcoming; a representative confirmed that the association did not intend to respond.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a full list of those local education authorities which have actively demonstrated that, in considering whether to retain playing fields released by a school proposed for closure, they have considered whether such playing fields should be retained to make up shortfalls at a neighbouring school, the method by which such consideration has been demonstrated, the total number of schools that have been subject to such consideration, the total number of schools at which the playing field has subsequently been released and the total number of schools at which the playing field has subsequently been retained.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available. Local education authorities are not required to provide such information when submitting proposals for school closure to my right hon. Friend.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 April to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman), Official Report, column 508, if the representations he has received supporting the need to use the tax system to help fulfil the Government's Rio commitment have (a) specifically supported the use of value added tax as the instrument to do so, (b) supported the imposition of VAT on standing charges or (c) proposed alternative ways of using the tax system in this regard.

Sir John Cope: A number of representations my right hon. Friend received specifically supported the use of VAT as an instrument to help fulfil the United Kingdom's Rio commitment. For example, the Friends of the Earth said in its Budget briefing

"Friends of the Earth therefore welcomes the Chancellor's commitment to increasing domestic fuel and power prices over the next two years through the gradual imposition of VAT."

Standing charges were not mentioned in any representations, and alternative ways of using the tax system were proposed in some of the representations received.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to impose value added tax on newspapers, periodicals, books or other publications; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend's plans for VAT changes are set out in the Budget and the Finance (No. 2) Bill and do not extend VAT in this area.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Inland Revenue rules regarding taxation on those resident in the United Kingdom for more than 183 days a year; and what steps are being taken to deal with evasion.

Mr. Dorrell: Under section 336 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988, an individual who is present in the United Kingdom for 183 days or more in a tax year is treated as resident for tax purposes for that year. The Inland Revenue reviews the residence status of individuals, where appropriate, as part of its general compliance responsibilities.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's policy in respect of companies cutting basic pay in order to increase the tax-free element through profit-related pay.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's purpose in introducing tax relief for profit-related pay—PRP—was to encourage flexibility in pay determination arrangements. The tax relief, subject to certain limits, is available only for PRP schemes which satisfy certain legislative requirements. Responsibility for the detailed terms of specific employment contracts rests with the parties themselves.

Unitary Taxation

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has received from United States Treasury Secretary Bentsen to his representations about unitary taxation.

Mr. Lamont: United States Secretary Bentsen has explained the United States Adminstration's position. He and his colleagues recognise the importance the British Government attach to this issue, the strength of feeling in the United Kingdom and the risk of retaliatory action by the United Kingdom if a satisfactory solution is not forthcoming. He has assured me that the Administration are very keen to find a solution to this problem that is acceptable. I have said that the Government are ready to discuss how an acceptable solution could best be achieved. But I have informed him that the Government will have to take retaliatory measures in relation to United States based companies if there is not a satisfactory resolution of the problem of the internationally opposed unitary tax on foreign-owned companies in California by the end of this year. Meanwhile, I have instructed the Inland Revenue to obtain information from California-based companies in the United Kingdom on the probable impact of such retaliatory measures.

ENVIRONMENT

Low Frequency Noise

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which year his Department first became aware of the hum noise complaint relating to low frequency noise; if he will make a statement concerning the action by his Department since that time to investigate this complaint; and what results were obtained.

Mr. Maclean: My Department first became aware of the problem of low frequency noise in the late 1970s. The independent noise review conducted for my Department in 1990 observed that this was a difficult area in terms of measurement, individual sensitivity and identification of sources. It recommended full support for the programme of research being conducted for the Department by the Building Research Establishment which is due to be completed early next year. Complaints about low frequency noise are investigated by local authorities under part III of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in the same way as other noise complaints.

Fanfare for a New World

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to account for the losses incurred by the Merseyside development corporation in subsidising the Fanfare for a New World concert.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has asked Merseyside development corporation's auditors, in their examination of the accounts for last year, to look specifically at the issue of the corporation's sponsorship of the concert; we await the outcome of this examination.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to restructure the Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. Robin Squire: In 1991 a financial management and policy review—FMPR—was carried out at Merseyside development corporation, as part of the Department's role in sponsoring non-departmental public bodies. The FMPR was based on four studies covering management, staffing, audit and pay and conditions. As the FMPR resulted in changes within the MDC's structure, there are no further proposals for any more changes.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an audit of the finances of the Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. Robin Squire: Merseyside development corporation is subject to an annual audit by independent external auditors, appointed by the Secretary of State. The auditors' report is published in the corporation's annual report. A full copy of the financial statements is available from the corporation on request.

New Housing

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new housing starts there were for the first three months of 1993 and for the corresponding period in 1992.

Mr. Baldry: Provisional figures show that there were 43,900 housebuilding starts in Great Britain during the first three months of 1993 compared with 41,100 starts during the corresponding period of 1992.

This increase is an expression of growing confidence by the building industry in the market for new houses. Taken with recent evidence of rising house prices and increased activity by estate agents, there are now signs of a recovery in the housing market.

Association of Environmental Consultants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the Association of Environmental Consultants on its new code of practice.

Mr. Maclean: My officials have received a copy of the code of practice. I welcome this example of self-regulation by a group of prominent companies and I am sure that it will help to encourage public confidence in their work.

Ozone Levels

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when and where World Health Organisation air quality guidelines for ozone levels have been exceeded since 1987.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 10 May 1993]: There are two World Health Organisation Guidelines for the protection of human health, a one-hour guideline of 76-100ppb and an eight-hour guideline of 50ppb. There are two guidelines for the protection of plants and crops, a daily mean of 33ppb and a growing season mean of 30ppb.

Ozone monitoring has been carried out since 1987 at 16 United Kingdom sites in the Department's network. Between 1987 and 1991 the guidelines were exceeded on at least one occasion at each site. Ozone levels in the United Kingdom are, however, among the lowest in Europe.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response the Government have made to the proposals for policy objectives on affordable rented housing put forward by the Churches National Housing Coalition in its document circulated to hon. Members.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The Government have noted with interest the points made by the Churches National Housing Coalition. The coalition's proposals concerned supply and choice of housing; homelessness and targeting resources. In all these areas we are already making significant progress.

The Government's aim is to ensure that a decent home is within the reach of every family.

We have taken steps to increase the supply of low-cost housing where it is needed. The housing market measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the autumn statement mean that the public resources available to housing associations, the main providers of new social housing, increased from £935 million in 1989-90 to £1·8 billion in 1993-94, making some 54,500 new homes available. In addition, the temporary relaxation of the rules governing local authority receipts, for the period November 1992 to December 1993, gives local authorities greatly increased spending power for projects such as the renovation of their housing stock.

Greater choice and efficiency are key elements of Government policy. We have taken measures to encourage the revival of the private rented sector; to give public sector tenants greater control over the management of their homes; to encourage more efficient management in the social sector; as well as promoting home ownership.

Under the rough sleepers initiative, £96 million was made available from 1990-91 to 1992-93 to provide additional hostel and longer-term accommodation in central London, where the problem is most acute. A further £86 million is available over three financial years, from April 1993-94 to 1995-96 build on the success of this initiative.

We believe that it is a more efficient use of resources to target subsidy towards people rather than simply into "bricks and mortar", so that the public subsidy reaches those individuals who need it most. Our policies on spending in the social sector reflect that.

In addition, home ownership continues to hold a central place in our housing policy. The right to buy for council housing, as well as our rent-to-mortgages proposals; cash incentive schemes to enable public sector tenants to move out into owner-occupation; and shared ownership schemes are all important parts of our commitment to help those who want to own their own homes to do so.

River Safety

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to publish an account of progress in the implementation of recommendations made after major disasters recommended in the Hayes report on river safety.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 May 1993]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport gave on 11 May, Official Report, column 380.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what study he is making of the legal liability resulting from transboundary environmental damage.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 May 1993]: This matter is considered whenever it is raised in the development, application or revision of the relevant international environmental legal instruments.

Crown Estate Commissioners

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will use the next appropriate legislative opportunity to give the Crown Estate Commissioners a statutory duty to further the conservation of the terrestrial and maritime environment.

Mr. Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to introduce such legislation.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Crown Estate Commissioners are subject to the environmental provisions of section 11 of the Countryside Act 1968; and whether those provisions extend to their functions below the low water mark.

Mr. Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The Crown Estate Commissioners' environmental and conservation policy applies the provisions of section 11 of the Countryside Act 1968 to their ownership both of land and of the sea bed below the low water mark.

SCOTLAND

Council Tax

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the overstepping of maximum charges for bands in the transitional reduction scheme of the council tax; and what proposals he has to prevent such occurrence.

Mr. Lang: I have received a number of representations from MPs and members of the public about the difference between the actual council tax, set by local authorities, and the adjusted council tax used by local authorities to calculate entitlement to transitional reduction.

The sole purpose of the transitional reduction scheme is to moderate increases in local tax bills arising as a consequence of the change in tax system and it is not intended to protect taxpayers from increases arising for other reasons. The level of adjusted council tax used to determine relief is calculated according to a prescribed formula. This formula takes account of what each local authority might need to spend on services in 1993-94 but makes no allowance for past deficits and assumes a council tax collection level of 98 per cent. Where local authorities budget responsibly and have good records of tax collection, the actual and adjusted taxes should be very close to each other and may be identical. This is the case in a number of areas in Scotland. Where this is not the case, taxpayers may wish to ask their local authority for an explanation.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to waive or curtail the operation of the planning processes relating to planning and development proposals from Highland regional council in respect of work to be carried out in the Kyle of Lochalsh and Kyleakin areas as a result of the building of the Skye bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to alter the planning processes in respect of Highland regional council's proposals.

Scottish Transport Group

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to privatise the Scottish Transport Group; what estimate of asset proceeds he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The disposal programme covering the undertakings of the Scottish Transport Group was published on 6 February 1990. The major part of this programme, the disposal of the 10 former subsidiaries of the Scottish Bus Group, has been successfully completed. My reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 2 December 1991, Official Report, columns 45-46, gave details of the proceeds from the sale of the Scottish Bus Group. The Scottish Transport Group will be wound up in due course after the disposal of its remaining property assets and the winding up of its pension funds. Estimates of likely proceeds from the remaining assets are commercially confidential.

Forestry

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 20 April, Official Report, columns 89-90, whether any additional person or persons have attended or are expected to attend any meeting of the forestry review group.

Sir Hector Monro: Members of the forestry review group may be represented by alternates from their Departments. No persons other than members or their alternates have attended meetings.

Oil and Gas

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people employed in (a) onshore and (b) offshore oil and gas-related activity in (i) 1991 and (ii) 1992; and what is his estimate of the total at the latest available date.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The latest available information on the number of people employed offshore in the oil and gas sector in the northern North sea is for September 1991 when it was estimated at between 26,400 and 27,950.

There are no estimates of oil and gas related employment for onshore workers alone for either 1991 or 1992. The latest information available relating to the number of people employed onshore and offshore in companies with turnover in excess of 80 per cent. related to oil and gas sector is for June 1992. On that basis, the estimate was 82,800, compared to 83,400 in June 1990.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports to Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has received on the trading activities of Seaconsar Far East Ltd. of Hong Kong in relation to British exports to Iran.

Mr. Needham: Information supplied to my Department about the trading activities of companies is treated as commercially confidential.

Council of Industry Ministers

Mr. Congdon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Council of Industry Ministers held on 4 May.

Mr. Sainsbury: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of European Community Industry Ministers held in Brussels on 4 May.

The most important item on the agenda was restructuring of the EC steel industry where I underlined the importance of keeping up the momentum of the discussions with industry to ensure that a definitive programme of capacity reductions is in place before the 30 September deadline set by the Industry Council in February. I emphasised that a successful restructuring plan is dependent on strict control of state aids to the industry, a point with which Vice-President Van Miert fully agreed. With support from a number of other member states, I argued for the European Coal and Steel Community levy to be phased out rapidly and the Danish presidency hoped that decisions could be taken by the end of the year.

The Council agreed in principle to extend the provisions of the seventh directive on aid to the shipbuilding industry to the end of 1994.

There was discussion of measures to support small and medium enterprises with a decision that a single programme should commence in July this year, subject to agreement on the detail of the text.

The Commission, at the United Kingdom's instigation, made a presentation of the progress towards accomplishing the tasks set out in the Council resolution on administrative simplification agreed during the United Kingdom presidency. The United Kingdom had placed this important topic on the agenda to keep up the momentum of the Commission's work in this area. The Commission's action should help to ensure that burdens on British business are minimised.

We also tabled a paper, which was supported by a number of other member states, outlining our concern about the damage to the United Kingdom's recycling industry caused by German packaging waste legislation. The Danish presidency hoped that progress could be made at the June Environment Council on the packaging waste directive as a Community solution to some aspects of this problem.

The Council also held a wide-ranging debate on the link between industrial competitiveness and environmental protection. We consider this link to be important and will continue to work with the Commission and other member states so that the relationship between industrial competitiveness and environmental protection is taken into account when formulating policies.

BNFL Office, South Korea

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the role of the BNFL office in South Korea; and what reassessment has been undertaken of its role in the context of discussions on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 5 May 1993]: It is for BNFL to decide on its commercial representation overseas. The Republic of Korea is a state party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and has concluded a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. Any business undertaken by BNFL will take place in accordance with the United Kingdom's obligations under the treaty.

Assisted Area Status

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the impact on the number of areas in London eligible for assisted status if each London borough were treated as a travel-to-work area.

Mr. Sainsbury: Designating assisted areas depends on the criteria set out in the consultation paper issued in June 1992. These criteria will be considered for all travel-to-work areas. For very large travel-to-work areas, including London, the situation in their constituent parts is also being considered.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals his Department has submitted to the European Commission for a new assisted areas map; and when he plans to submit further proposals.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 12 May 1993]: The Government's full proposals for the new assisted areas map will be submitted to the European Commission shortly. Proposals for enhanced assisted area status for the Barnsley, Doncaster and Mansfield travel-to-work areas, which formed part of the package of support measures for coal closure areas announced by my right hon. Friend last October, were cleared with the European Commission beforehand. Additionally, my statement about Swan

Hunter on 12 May indicated that the Newcastle and South Tyneside travel-to-work areas would remain as development areas, subject to European Commission approval: discussion with the Commission on this point is now under way.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the non-governmental public bodies operational in Wales indicating (a) the total number of Government appointees, (b) the number of Welsh-speaking appointees, (c) the total number of staff employed, (d) the number of Welsh-speaking staff and (e) the number of staff within each body that have received paid leave to attend courses to learn Welsh for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 23 March 1993 at columns 549-50, listing the public bodies to which I make appointments. As some people hold more than one appointment, the number of appointees is 960. Of these, 129 have indicated on their nomination form that they speak Welsh. However, this information is not provided in all cases. Only executive non-departmental public bodies employ staff, and the information requested is shown in the table.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 523, what conclusions he has now drawn about travel times from the specified communities to Bridgend and Barry, following his discussions on 23 April.

Mr. David Hunt: The length of time taken for residents of these communities to reach Bridgend and Barry would vary according to such things as the route taken and the means of transport used.

Housing Needs Assessment

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to establish a national housing needs assessment mechanism in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to make his Department's housing needs assessment research in Wales available for public scrutiny.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Housing Management Advisory Panel for Wales has just published "Taking Stock: A Guide to Local Housing Assessment".

Epilepsy

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he intends to take following the recent seminars on epilepsy in Wales regarding (a) dissemination of the conclusions of the report, "Epilepsy, in Wales—a Study of the Needs of People with Epilepsy, Current Services and of Potential Developments", (b) the identification of potential strategies for development of support services and (c) the current and potential roles and responsibilities of voluntary, statutory and professional agencies.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The seminars were paid for by the Welsh Office as part of our further consultations to assist consideration of this matter. The report of the seminars has only recently been received and is being carefully studied.

Disabled People

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by local education authority the number of (a) teachers, (b) nursery nurses and (c) teachers' aides employed who are disabled.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Immunisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of babies were immunised and vaccinated in each family health service authority area in the last year for which statistics are available and the two previous years; and if he will provide a similar list for those children receiving their booster vaccination and immunisation injections.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information relating to children immunised is collected by health authorities. The percentage of children resident at the end of the year in question and who had been immunised by their second birthday is given in the tables.

Information on the number of booster vaccinations is not collected in such a manner that would enable the Department to calculate a percentage of children vaccinated by a given birthday. However, the tables show the number of children aged four and under who received booster/reinforcing doses in each of the last three years, based on the district in which the dose was given rather than the district in which the child was resident. These figures do not represent the number of children who had received a booster/reinforcing dose by the age of four and under, as a child would be included in the figures only for the year in which the dose was given.

Tourism

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new initiatives the Welsh tourist board will be embarking on in the summer of 1993 to attract visitors to Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The WTB has launched a major new £2·5 million advertising and promotional campaign for 1993-94 as part of its ongoing marketing strategy to support the tourism industry in Wales. This includes television advertisements, campaign posters, direct mailing/response advertising for the autumn, main and spring seasons. In addition to this, the WTB has earmarked nearly £800,000 for campaigns in selected overseas target markets with a much greater emphasis on European database marketing activities.

Elderly People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on how many people over the age of 65 years live alone in Wales; and how many people aged 65 years or more living alone have suffered from dementia in each of the last five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The 1991 census recorded that there were 174,049 persons of pensionable age living alone in Wales. Information on those over the age of 65 years living alone is not available. Information on the number of people aged 65 years or more living alone who have suffered from dementia is not available centrally.

Pollution, Pontypool

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of his Department's report on polychlorinated biphenyls, dioxins and furans in the Pontypool environment—the Panteg monitoring project—have been printed; and to whom it has been distributed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Two hundred. Copies were provided for local Members of Parliament; the Chairman of the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs; the EEC; the regulatory authorities; ReChem International Ltd; Torfaen borough council; property holders in the Panteg area on whose land significant testing had been carried out and the secretary of Mothers and Children against Toxic Waste.

The Welsh Office is also making the report available to other interested parties at £25 each.

Public Appointments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list all those non-departmental public bodies in Wales, for which he advises on the membership; and if he will list the members so appointed;

(2) if he will list the members of all the non-departmental public bodies for which he has responsibility.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 23 March 1993 at columns 549-50, listing current appointments I have made to public bodies in Wales. Information on appointments made by other Government Ministers is contained in "Public Bodies 1992" available in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to the report by the Social Security Consortium entitled "The Social Fund: Failing the Poorest", a copy of which has been sent to him; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement on the findings of the report.

Mr. Scott: We have noted the report, which is based on the research we commissioned from York university's social policy research unit—SPRU. We are carefully considering the operation of the social fund in response to the SPRU research, along with a number of other authoritative reports and our own close monitoring of the fund.

Methods of Payment

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce financial inducements to pensioners and other benefit recipients to obtain their benefits through banks rather than post offices.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no such plans.

Severe Hardship Claims

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table listing the number of severe hardship claims made and awards granted for each of the last 12 quarters in each district.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Alan Milburn, dated 12 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will publish a table listing the number of severe hardship claims made and awards granted for each of the last twelve quarters in each district.

The complete range of information you have requested is not available except at a disproportionate cost. This is primarily because statistics regarding severe hardship claims are maintained clerically and not in the format requested. Additionally, the Benefits Agency district arrangements were introduced only in April 1991, and statistics prior to this relate to the former local office structure.

I have, however, appended the national figures for Severe Hardship claims and awards for the period requested. I should emphasise that these relate to claims made rather than individual customers.

I hope you find this reply helpful. Copies of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the latest available figures for (a) income support recipients, (b) those in receipt of a family premium and (c) those in receipt of lone-parent premiums in the district council areas of Derbyshire.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Harry Barnes, dated 12 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking if he will give the latest available figures for (a) Income Support recipients, (b) those in receipt of a family premium and (c) those in receipt of lone parent premiums in the district council areas of Derbyshire.

The complete range of information you have requested is not available and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost. This is because information regarding the number of Income Support recipients is not collected on the basis of district council areas. Additionally, statistics are not routinely collected that reflect the number of customers in receipt of a family premium.

Information concerning lone parent premiums and the number of Income Support recipients in the Benefits Agency's offices in Derbyshire is in the Official Report Vol. 224 Col. 300.

However, estimates of the numbers of recipients receiving family premium and lone parent premium nationally are available from the Annual Statistical Enquiry (ASE). This is a point in time survey based on a one per cent. sample of all people in receipt of Income Support.

The latest information from the ASE relates to May 1991. The estimates from this were 4,487,000 recipients of Income Support, 1,318,000 recipients of the family premium and 871,000 recipients of the lone parent premium.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the latest available figures for (a) claimants, (b) adult dependants who are in receipt of income support and (c) the number of children in such households in the district council areas of Derbyshire.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

The complete range of information you have requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. This is because information regarding the number of Income Support recipients, their children or adult dependants, is not collected on the basis of district council areas. However, information concerning the number of Income Support recipients by Benefits Agency office in Derbyshire can be found in the Library.

Estimates of the numbers of adult dependants and children nationally are available from the Income Support Annual Statistical Enquiry (ASE). This is a point in time survey based on a one per cent. sample of all people in receipt of Income Support.

The latest information from the ASE related to May 1991. The estimates from this were 4,487,000 recipients of Income Support, 763,000 partners, 2,368,000 children under 16 and 129,000 dependants aged between 16 and 19.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Pensions

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals living in the Falkland Islands are currently in receipt of a British state retirement pension; what would be the additional cost of granting them inflation-proofed pensions; and if he will seek to conclude as soon as possible a reciprocal agreement in respect of the Falkland Islands.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 5 May 1993]: In December 1991, the latest date for which figures are currently available, 14 people resident in the Falkland Islands were receiving United Kingdom retirement pensions. The additional cost of paying them inflation-proofed pensions would be approximately £11,000 per year, at 1992 rates. However, any concession on indexation for the Falklands would lead inevitably to pressure to treat pensioners living in other countries in the same way. To inflation-proof United Kingdom pensions worldwide, for the 355,000 British pensioners who do not receive index-linked payments, would cost some £275 million a year. We therefore have no plans to conclude a reciprocal agreement with the Falkland Islands.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabies

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to revise the legal provisions and the inspections practice of Her Majesty's Customs to keep rabies and other notifiable diseases out of the United Kingdom following the opening of the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: An order will shortly be presented to the House which will provide the legal backing for policing and frontier controls in respect of the channel tunnel. The order will not introduce any new rabies control measures, but will adapt our current procedures at ports of entry around the United Kingdom to the unique physical circumstances of the channel tunnel. Animal health controls at the channel tunnel and its terminals will be just as strict as those presently in force at sea ports and airports. In addition, the channel tunnel concessionaires have established a number of preventive measures to prevent animals entering the tunnel, and more will be put in place once the tunnel is operational.

Ozone Depletion

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been commissioned by the Government on the implications of the depletion of the ozone layer for agriculture in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: The Government will be spending over £0·5 million in 1993-94 on research to examine the effects of ultra-violet-B—UV-B—radiation on agricultural crops. The project sponsors, titles, contractors and estimated costs for 1993-94 are as follows:

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Effects of UV-B irradiation on cell cycle gene expression and DNA repair in developing wheat (Tricticum aestivum L.) leaves University of Manchester, with Horticulture Research International.
£54,000.

The molecular basis of UV-B perception and response in plants.
University of Glasgow.
£38,000.

Molecular mechanisms involved in UV-B induced changes in gene expression for photosynthetic proteins.
Horticulture Research International.
£43,000.

The interactions of enhanced UV-B and water stress on oil seed rape cultivars with differing UV-B sensitivity.
University of Cambridge.
£67,000.

Characterise the molecular basis of gene regulation by environmental stress, including UV-B.
Horticulture Research International.
£167,000 (1992-93 cost. 1993-94 estimated cost is unavailable).

Department of the Environment

Impact of increased UV-B radiation (the impacts of UV-B on natural and cultivated vegetation in the United Kingdom; mapping the risk of UV-B impacts on cultivated and natural vegetation in the United Kingdom; and, the impacts of UV-B on plant pathogens and host-pathogen interactions).
University of Lancaster.
£84,000.

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food

Responses of crops to UV-B radiation.
University of Lancaster, with Horticulture Research International.
£74,000.

Foot and Mouth Disease

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether foot and mouth disease was present in any of the countries from which the imported cattle, currently subject to his Ministry's attempts to trace those which have been vaccinated, have originated; how many of the animals imported into the United Kingdom have not yet been traced; and what factors are responsible for the time it is taking to locate the remaining suspect animals.

Mr. Gummer: There have been no confirmed reports of the presence of foot and mouth disease in either the Czech Republic or in Poland in recent years.

The vast majority of Czech cattle, for which the tracing exercise began first, have now been located and good progress is being made in tracing the Polish cattle.

Some difficulties have been experienced in tracing those animals which have passed through the hands of several owners since they were originally imported. Tracing has also been made more difficult by the keeping of poor movement records by some owners and some retagging of livestock following change of ownership.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date the last consignment of livestock suspected of having been vaccinated against foot and mouth disease was received into the United Kingdom; and after what period of time there is no risk of a latent carrier of the disease transmitting that disease to other animals.

Mr. Gummer: The last consignment of livestock suspected of having been vaccinated against foot and mouth disease—FMD—arrived in this country on 25 March 1993. All imported FMD-seropositive animals have been inspected by the State Veterinary Service. There is no evidence of clinical disease in any of the animals or suggestion that any of the animals are carriers. Studies elsewhere have shown that carrier animals may be the source of subsequent disease outbreaks up to two and a half years after the carrier animal was first infected.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to ensure that any animal slaughtered because of vaccination for foot and mouth will be destroyed and not allowed to enter the food chain.

Mr. Gummer: All animals found to be vaccinated against FMD will be either re-exported or slaughtered. There is no risk to public health from vaccinated animals entering the food chain.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to ensure that farmers who came to be in possession of vaccinated cattle are not made responsible for meeting the direct losses incurred.

Mr. Gummer: The resolution of the problem is a commercial matter and it is for the current owners and importers to come to a mutually acceptable arrangement with the exporter in the country of origin for the animals' re-export or slaughter.

Pyrrolizidine Alkaloids

Mr. Cash: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the working party on naturally occurring toxicants in food to complete its study of pyrrolizidine alkaloids in milk and in herbal remedies; whether the report of that study will be published; and what pyrrolizidine alkaloids the study has so far found in milk samples.

Mr. Soames: The working party on naturally occurring toxicants in food has completed its study of pyrrolizidine alkaloids in milk. Pyrrolizidine alkaloids were not detected in any of the milk samples taken. A project to study the metabolism of pyrrolizidine alkaloids found in herbal ingredients has recently commenced and is due for completion in 1995. The results of all these studies will be published. Data on pyrrolizidine alkaloids in the herbal remedy comfrey have already been published.

PRIME MINISTER

Means-tested Payments

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all payments made to individuals by Government Departments, Government agencies and local authorities which are subject to a means test.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is not available centrally. The main source of income-related payments is the social security system which provides benefits administered by the Benefits Agency and local authorities. These benefits include income support, family credit, disability working allowance, housing benefit and council tax benefit.

A number of Departments operate income-related assistance for a variety of special purposes. For example:

The Department of Education operates a system of mandatory and discretionary grants for people in higher education. Such awards consist of two parts, fees and maintenance, the latter of which is means tested. The scheme is administered by local authorities.

The Department of the Environment provides a scheme for home renovation which is administered by local authorities.

The Lord Chancellor's Department operates the scheme for legal aid.

The Department of Health is responsible for the NHS low income scheme which provides help with NHS charges, optical costs and fares to hospital to receive NHS treatment.

Alan Clark (Diaries)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration has been given to the confidentiality guidelines set out in the advice to Ministers manual in relation to the submission by the right hon. Alan Clark, former Minister of State for Defence Procurement, of his diaries to the Cabinet Office for review prior to publication.

The Prime Minister: Paragraph 19 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" requires former Ministers to submit their memoirs to the Secretary of the Cabinet before publication and to conform to the principles set out in the Radcliffe report of 1976 (Cmnd 6386). In offering comments, the Secretary of the Cabinet takes account of the recommendations in the Radcliffe report about the protection of confidential relationships within Government.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to monitor the incidence of kwashiakor, marasmus and malaria in Iraq; and by what mechanism Her Majesty's Government monitor the condition of the Iraqi people.

The Prime Minister: The United Nations conducted an assessment mission to Iraq in March 1993 which included a survey of the health of the population. As a result, WHO and UNICEF have included programmes to help relieve the situation in the United Nations plan of action. As well as official United Nations reports we also receive independent reports from non-governmental organisations working in Iraq.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 13 May.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 13 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Blair: To ask the Attorney-General what was the average time to elapse between the offence and the completion of proceedings at magistrates courts for an indictable offence for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

Information on the average time taken for indictable cases from offence to completion has been collected centrally only since 1985. Data are published at regular intervals in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin series; issue Nos. 24/89 and 8/93 cover the years 1985 to 1992. Copies are available from the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

3. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to the sentencing powers of the courts in respect of persistent 10 to 14-year-old offenders.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Courts currently do not have the power to sentence persistent juvenile offenders to custody. I propose to remedy this as soon as possible by introducing a secure training order for 12 to 15-year-olds.

19. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what view he has formed of the effectiveness of current measures to deal with persistent juvenile offenders.

21. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the current measures to deal with persistent juvenile offenders.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I do not consider that the measures currently available to the courts when they have to deal with persistent juvenile offenders are satisfactory. That is why I announced new proposals in my statement to the House on 2 March 1993, at columns 139 to 42.

24. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the numbers of juvenile offenders who come from single-parent families.

Mr. Jack: I regret that information currently available does not enable that particular assessment to be made.

26. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the operation of juvenile attendance centres.

Mr. Jack: The operation of attendance centres is kept under constant review. We are, however, currently preparing a new national standard which will cover objectives and regimes, revised attendance centre rules and fresh detailed administrative guidance for officers in charge of centres, all of which will be subject to an appropriate process of consultation before they are issued.

Home Office circular 72/1992 issued on 28 July 1992 described some of the new arrangements for dealing with young offenders following the full implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, and reminded courts of their powers to make attendance centre orders where young people have defaulted in the payment of fines. This circular listed all the centres available in England and Wales.

My Department also produces a periodical publication called "Attendance Centre News" which is circulated to, among others, the officers in charge of the centres, probation and social services and the courts. The most recent edition which was produced in a more accessible and informative style than previous versions was published in September last year. It included articles about the activities undertaken at the centres. A copy of it is available in the Library of the House.

Crime and the Economy

7. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made as to any link between crime and the economic situation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Work on this subject was covered in the Home Office research study "Trends in crime and their interpretation" published in 1990 and I have no current plans for fresh research into this area.

MSV Pescado

14. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made by Devon and Cornwall police in raising the MSV Pescado.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The salvage company contracted to raise the Pescado on behalf of the Devon and Cornwall constabulary hopes to raise the vessel in the very near future.

Libyan Life Prisoners

15. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners of Libyan nationality are now serving life sentences in United Kingdom prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Five prisoners of Libyan nationality are now serving life sentences in United Kingdom prisons.

Police Authority Chairpersons

16. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria will be used by him to select the chairpersons of the new police authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We want businesslike, efficiently run police authorities which are able to monitor police performance locally, to help establish local policing needs and to ensure the delivery of local and national policing objectives. This will require leadership from the police authority. I will select from the overall membership the person who is best able to give that lead.

Clear-up Rates

17. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which five police forces have the highest clear-up rates in England and Wales.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Dyfed-Powys cleared up 53 per cent. in 1992 followed by Gwent with 44 per cent., Merseyside with 42 per cent. and Suffolk and Lincolnshire with 39 per cent.

Sentencing

18. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the action taken by his Department to deal with lenient sentences.

25. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on legislation relating to appeals against lenient sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring).

Police Duties

20. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to increase the numbers of police officers on the streets.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have increased numbers by 16,500 since 1979. Increasing police strength is not, though, the only way to increase the number of front-line officers. We encourage police authorities to civilianise posts which do not need to be done by police officers, and to ensure that their officers are deployed as effectively as possible. This will allow more police officers to be released for operational duties, rather than having to undertake administrative tasks which can be done by others.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

22. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the workings of the Criminal Justice Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Arrangements were made in advance of the implementation of the Act on 1 October 1991 for its effects to be carefully monitored and evaluated. This process is still ongoing, but my right hon. and learned Friend has already said that it will be necessary to make some changes to the sentencing provisions in part I of the Act and in the arrangements under which the courts operate the unit fine system.

Unit Fine System

23. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to review the workings of the unit fine system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have been keeping the operation of the unit fine system under close review since it came into operation on 1 October 1992. We have also received representations about it, most recently from the Magistrates Association of England and Wales. Following its meeting with us on 4 May, the association has issued a bulletin to its members encouraging magistrates to make full use of the discretion already available to them under the system, in setting fine levels. But we have recognised that it will also be necessary to make some changes by way of legislation in areas such as the mechanism for determining unit values, in order to ensure that the scheme operates fairly and in accordance with the original intention. These changes will be introduced as soon as possible.

Street Lighting

27. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the effectiveness of improved street lighting to combat crime.

Mr. Jack: Research for the Home Office has shown that improved lighting can reduce crime when introduced as part of a package of crime prevention measures. By itself, better street lighting appears to have no direct effect on crime levels, but it is helpful in reducing the fear of crime and making people feel safer.

Car Crime

28. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to reduce car crime.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Colchester, South and Maldon (Mr. Whittingdale).

Obscene Publications Acts

29. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made by the Metropolitan police in the latest year for which figures are available for offences arising out of the Obscene Publications Acts.

Mr. Jack: None. The Obscene Publications Act does not provide the police with a power of arrest.

Gun Licences

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review laws under which licences are issued for people to hold guns where objections are made to the authorities by next of kin of the applicant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Firearms Acts 1968 to 1992 require the chief officer of police to satisfy himself that an applicant for a firearm or shotgun certificate can be permitted to possess a firearm or shotgun without danger to public safety or to the peace. The chief officer may take account of any objections from the applicant's next of kin or anybody else when considering such an application. We have no plans to review this aspect of the law.

Bail (Court Appearances)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many, and what percentage, of defendants bailed by (a) the police, (b) magistrates and (c) the Crown court failed to appear for the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is given in the table, and published annually in "Criminal statistics, England and Wales", chapter 8.

Crime Statistics

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many crimes were recorded by the police in England and Wales in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many (a) incidents of violence against a person and (b) robberies were recorded by the police in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many incidents of fraud and forgery were recorded by the police in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The requested information is published in table 2.17 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1989" and in table 6 of Home Office statistical bulletin 9/93; copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the percentage clear-up rate for crime, (b) the authorised police establishment and (c) the total number of crimes reported for each police force in England and Wales for 1992.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 29 April 1993]: Information on percentage clear-up rates and the number of recorded offences by police force area for 1992 is contained in tables 4 and 2 respectively of Home Office statistical bulletin 9/93, a copy of which is available in the Library. Figures for the authorised police establishment for 31 December 1992 are contained in the table:

Police Roles

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake a detailed study of the present and future roles of the police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently awaiting the report from Sir Patrick Sheehy, chairman of the inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards. In reaching its recommendations, the inquiry has been considering and taking into account, the results of fact-finding studies into the roles and responsibilities of police officers.

Poppers

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider the proscribing of the recreational drug poppers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The active ingredient of "poppers" is one or other of a group of chemicals known as alkyl nitrites. The misuse of alkyl nitrites has been considered by the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on three occasions, most recently in 1991. The council found that, although these substances posed a limited health hazard when misused, they were not dependence forming and did not give rise to the sorts of social problems which were sufficient to justify their control under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

We continue to keep the situation under review.

Bone Tests

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of his Department's tests at Aldermaston to identify bones brought from Russia.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have asked the chief executive of the Forensic Science Service to reply and she will do so shortly. A copy of her reply will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Dr. Janet Thompson to Mr. David Atkinson, undated:

You recently tabled a Parliamentary Question about the joint Russian British project to identify remains purported to be those of Tsar Nicholas II and his family. As you know, the arrangement now is that the Chief Executive of an Executive Agency, with the agreement of the Minister, replies to Members of Parliament on operational matters. I am therefore replying on behalf of the Home Office Forensic Science Service (FSS).

Samples of the remains discovered near Ekaterinburg in July 1991 were brought to Britain in September by Dr. Pavel Ivanov of the Bureau of the Chief Forensic Medical Examiner, Russian Ministry of Health. Work carried out in Russia had lead to a tentative identification but Russian forensic authorities sought the assistance of the FSS in applying the Polymerase Chain Reaction DNA technique to the samples.

Extraction of DNA from the samples was successful. Comparison with DNA from known relatives of the Romanov family, and statistical analysis of the findings, is at present being undertaken at the FSS's Research Laboratory in Aldermaston. We expect to announce the results of the project in the summer.

The work also forms part of the FSS research programme. If validated, the techniques used will be applied to criminal casework and will extend the range of services we provide.

Interior Ministers Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals in regard to deterring, discovering and apprehending nuclear smugglers will be discussed at the European Interior Ministers Council in Denmark on 6 and 7 May.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Horse Watch Schemes

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his Department is doing to support horse watch schemes in all parts of the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We encourage all watch type schemes which involve members of the community helping the police in the fight against crime.

I understand that police forces throughout the country provide assistance to people wishing to set up horse watch schemes. For example, there are schemes in operation in areas such as Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Surrey, Suffolk and Northumbria.

In March this year, the Association of Chief Police Officers gave approval to national guidelines which have been drawn up by the British Horse Society. The guidelines provide information on how to set up and run horse watch schemes and have recently been sent to all police forces in England and Wales. It is, however, ultimately for each chief officer of police to decide how to allocate the resources available to him.

Police (Courts)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to reduce the time spent by police officers attending court which turn out to be unnecessary because they are not called as witnesses.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The implementation of the recommendations of the working group on pre-trial issues which are aimed at increasing the efficiency of the whole pre-trial process will affect this. The recommendations include improved court listing procedures and greater emphasis on pre-trial hearings. The package of measures should significantly reduce the number of occasions on which police officers attend court for no useful purpose.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Flag

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the origin and current status of the Northern Ireland flag.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: In 1953 the former Government of Northern Ireland gave their assent to the flying in certain circumstances of their own flag known as the "Ulster Banner". This consists of a St. George's cross with a crowned six-pointed star and a red hand at the centre. This was not intended to be a replacement or alternative to the Union flag as the official flag of Northern Ireland. Since the dissolution of the Government of Northern Ireland, this flag has had no official status.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what flag or flags are used by Her Majesty's Government to represent Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The official flag of Northern Ireland is the Union flag.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the occasions in the last year on which the Minister responsible for health and agriculture visited the constituency of Upper Bann, indicating with respect to each visit whether the hon. Member for that constituency was notified.

Mr. Hanley: In his capacity as health Minister, my noble Friend Lord Arran visited Craigavon area hospital on 11 May 1992 and 20 April 1993, and Banvale social education centre on 17 February 1993. In his capacity as Minister for agriculture, he visited the constituency of Upper Bann on 12 May 1992, 23 July 1992, 27 August 1992 and 24 February 1993. The hon. Member was notified on each occasion except 27 August 1992.

Security Statistics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make available the security statistics for 1991, together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type offences and convictions for scheduled offences for the year.

Mr. Mates: Security statistics for 1991 are as follows. Statistics for previous years can be obtained from the Library.

Table 1

Notes:

1. Non-scheduled offences are included in table 3 where co-defendants were charged with scheduled offences, and where the charge was "reduced" (e.g. from robbery to handling stolen goods), or where a defendant pleaded guilty to a lesser charge.
2. Breach of community service orders/suspended sentences are included where the orders were made on scheduled offences. They are also included where the breach of conditions is heard along with other scheduled offences.
3. Where a person has been convicted of more than one offence, only that offence which received the longest sentence is recorded in the statistics.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Indonesia

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current extent of United Kingdom aid to Indonesia; and what has it been over the past five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 7 May, column 260.

We also provide debt relief on past development loans. The Commonwealth Development Corporation currently has investments totalling £72 million and covering 11 projects.

Gross public expenditure on United Kingdom aid to Indonesia since 1987-88 is as follows:

(in £ millions)

	Technical Co-op and Financial Aid	ATP	CDC	Debt Relief	Total
1987-88	6·044	1·807	4·537	2·273	14·660
1988-89	8·333	2·410	4·350	2·273	17·366

1990-91	10·689	6·342	5·296	2·273	24·600
1991-92	10·372	10·828	10·952	2·273	34·425

Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available.

Brazil

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the Overseas Development Administration aid programme for Brazil; and what plans he has to augment the programme that assists Brazil's Indian population.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The main emphasis of the Brazil programme is on environmental activities. There is a large programme of forestry support in the Amazonia region and a smaller programme of urban environmental projects. We are also involved in a number of other sectors, mainly involving human resource development. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 19 April 1993, columns 37-38.

We are currently assisting indigenous people with support to six projects run by the Catholic Fund for Overseas Development and OXFAM co-financed through the joint funding scheme. We have also agreed to assist the Ministry of Indian Affairs in refitting three aircraft which are used to protect and provide services for the indigenous peoples of Brazil.

Cambodia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds were pledged by the United Kingdom for Cambodia at the United Nations Aid Conference in Tokyo in June 1992; how this commitment has been met to date; what information he has on the payments made to date by the other pledger nations; and if he will make a statement on the current effectiveness of the United Nations transitional authority in Cambodia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In June 1992 we announced that our total aid pledge for Cambodia had been increased by $10 million to some $30 million. Of this sum we have already committed nearly $24 million, principally on humanitarian aid and the United Nations High Commission for Refugees repatriation programme, mine clearance, human rights, health care, water supply and English language teacher training. Of the $880 million pledged by donors at Tokyo, some $94·3 million had been provided for aid projects within Cambodia up to February this year. A national breakdown of this figure is not available.

UNTAC has made considerable progress towards implementing the comprehensive political settlement in Cambodia. Preparations for the elections due to be held from 23 to 27 May are well advanced: more than 4·6 million Cambodians have registered to vote, 96 per cent. of those eligible; the election campaign began on 6 April, and UNTAC has taken a range of measures to promote a neutral political environment. In addition, nearly all the 350,000 refugees formerly in camps on the Thai-Cambodian border have returned to their homes.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will call on the G7 countries at their summit in July to support a financial plan for sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 12 May 1993]: We are working to ensure that the developing countries, including those in Africa, will be among the subjects covered at the G7 summit, especially as the summit will take place in the run-up to the conference on Africa to be hosted by the Japanese Government in October. The needs of sub-Saharan Africa have a high priority for the British aid programme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library before the United Nations conference on human rights in Vienna a copy of the United Kingdom national statement on human rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A copy of the United Kingdom national statement at the United Nations world conference on human rights will be placed in the Library of the House as soon as it has been delivered.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the United Nations conference on human rights in Vienna in June.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We will be represented at the United Nations conference on human rights in Vienna from 14 to 25 June, by a delegation consisting of Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials with expertise in the field of human rights, including the United Kingdom permanent representative to the United Nations at Geneva, and representatives of interested dependent territories. The delegation will be led either by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs or by myself.

Eritrea

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by his Department to grant diplomatic recognition to Eritrea following the recent referendum.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We warmly welcome the outcome of the referendum on Eritrea's status. United Nations observers have confirmed their satisfaction with the process. This opens the way for recognition of Eritrea. The Eritreans have announced that their independence will be formally declared on 24 May. Accordingly, we plan to announce our decision on recognition by that date.

Public Immunity Certificates

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his oral reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr Michie) of 25 November 1992, Official Report, column 861, what country he was in when the public immunity certificate to which he refers was (a) being considered and (b) signed.

Mr. Hurd: I was in South Africa when the public interest immunity was considered and signed on 3 and 4 September 1992. When the supplemental certificate was considered and signed, I had returned to London from the United Nations General Assembly in the early hours of 23 September for two debates in the House returning to New York in the afternoon of 25 September.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals were put forward by the United Kingdom in regard to the European Commission report on access to information; and what discussions took place and what decisions were taken on the report at the Foreign Affairs Council on 10 to 11 May.

Mr. Garel-Jones: None. The Council agreed that the Commission's paper was a good basis for further work and that it should be studied further in the Committee of Permanent Representatives.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals were put forward by the United Kingdom on trade and environment at the Foreign Affairs Council on 10 to 11 May.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Kingdom did not put forward any specific proposals on trade and the environment at the Foreign Affairs Council on 10 May. Ministers agreed a statement put forward by the presidency on the relationship between trade and environmental policies in advance of the OECD ministerial meeting on 2 June.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry clearances were issued to overseas domestic workers at the latest available date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Separate statistics on the number of entry clearances issued to domestic workers are not kept and could not be obtained except at disproportionate expense.

Iran

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart regarding the sponsorship of terrorism by Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have regular discussions with the United States on combating the whole range of international terrorism, including state sponsorship.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 14 April, Official Report, column 578, what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to combat international terrorism sponsored by Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall continue our efforts, both through bilateral co-operation and international forums, to combat all forms of state support for international terrorism. We and our European partners made clear our concern about Iran's behaviour in this area at the Edinburgh summit in December 1992.

Belize

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy to guarantee the frontier of Belize with Guatemala; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Our policy is to contribute all we can to the continuing improvement in relations between Belize and Guatemala and to encourage a full and final settlement of the border dispute between the two countries.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest situation regarding the Belize garrison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The British garrison has been deployed in Belize since 1948. The central American region, of which Belize forms a part, has recently seen a welcome transformation in its political and security circumstances. The civil wars in Nicaragua and El Salvador are over; peace talks are in progress in Guatemala's 30-year domestic conflict; and progress towards regional integration is gathering speed. Central America's major neighbours, the Group of 3—Mexico, Colombia and Venezuela—are playing a part in this process, as is the United States. So is Britain, with its EC partners, through the San José dialogue between the EC and central America.

In 1991 Guatemala recognised Belize as a sovereign and independent state; diplomatic relations were subsequently established and much progress has been made since then towards a normal bilateral relationship. The time has now come for the British military presence in Belize to evolve, to reflect the improvements in the regional political and security picture and in the very welcome and encouraging developments in Belize/Guatemala relations. Accordingly, over the next year or so, the garrison will be gradually reduced. At the request of and with the agreement of the Government of Belize, the British military presence will take the form of a training operation for United Kingdom troops. The formal responsibility for the defence of Belize will pass from British forces to the Belize defence force at a date to be announced in due course. Britain stands ready to play a part in any consultations that the Belize authorities may request on Belize's future security.

The British troop presence in Belize is of long standing. Her Majesty's Government welcome the developments in Belize's bilateral and regional relationships which permit this evolution of the British troop presence. Her Majesty's Government have assisted since Belizean independence in 1981 with the development of the Belize defence force—BDF—through the provision of loan service personnel, equipment, training and advice. We will maintain our programme of assistance to the BDF to sustain and improve the force's capability. Belize will, of course, also continue to be a beneficiary under Britain's bilateral aid programme.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the health situation in relation to marasmus, kwashiokor, and malaria in Iraq; and what response he has made to the latest Harvard study of the medical situation in the Tigris and Euphrates valleys, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 12 May 1993]: We are aware of reports that the general standard of health in Iraq continues to decline as a result of the failure of the Government of Iraq to use their existing resources for the benefit of those in need in Iraq. I have not seen a copy of any recent Harvard study.

HEALTH

Abortions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of NHS abortions is provided through agency arrangements, (a) nationally and (b) for each district health authority;

(2) which district health authorities have agency arrangements for the provision of NHS abortions.

Mr. Sackville: The information will be placed in the Library. For reasons of confidentiality, statistics for district health authorities are presented by DHA of woman's usual residence, not by DHA of termination.

Agency arrangements for provision of national health service abortions are agreed between individual DHAs and the private sector. They are set up to provide for the needs of the DHA's resident population. Central receipt of the notification of dates when agency arrangements come into effect, and when they are dissolved, can be subject to delay and therefore the figures should be interpreted with caution.

AZT

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a list of all the fully completed research on the effects of AZT on patients with either ARC or AIDS distinguishing the research that shows conclusively that AZT is of benefit in such cases.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Licensing Authority receives reports of fully completed research as part of a licensing application. The information relating to licensing applications is confidential in accordance with section 118 of the Medicines Act 1968. However, most of the extensive research has been published in the scientific literature and copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds the drug AZT was given fast-track licensing by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The licence application for Retrovir (AZT) was given fast-track status by the Licensing Authority on the grounds that it was considered to be a potential major advance in the treatment of AIDS patients. At the time of the decision in late 1986 there was no alternative licensed product for the treatment of AIDS. The decision to fast-track the application was made solely on public health grounds.

The fast-tracking of an application means that it is assessed out of turn, but is still subject to the full standard assessment process. The criteria for granting fast-track status to an application was set out in the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Braintree (Mr. Newton), the then Secretary of State, to my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 3 November 1987 at column 703.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration is being given to the advertising and promotion campaign relating to AZT in respect of the application of the prescription medicines code of practice authority guidelines.

Dr. Mawhinney: The application of the code of practice is a matter for the prescription medicines code of practice authority.

Wellcome Foundation

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the meetings which took place from 1985 to 1988 between representatives of the Wellcome Foundation and her Department or with Ministers.

Dr. Mawhinney: There were 16 meetings with officials, and one with a Minister and officials on pharmaceutical price regulation scheme matters and related business. There was also a number of meetings with officials of the then medicines division, now the Medicines Control Agency, and the AIDS unit, covering a large number of issues, but it is possible to quantify these only at disproportionate cost.

Limited List Prescribing

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 159-60, how many of the (a) anti-diarrhoeal drugs, (b) appetite suppressants, (c) medicines for the treatment of vaginal and vulval conditions and (d) drugs for the treatment of soft tissue inflammation currently available on the national health service have been the subject of letters to manufacturers by the Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs in respect of the proposed extension of the limited list.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Advisory Committee on Drugs is an independent committee. It would not be appropriate at this stage to disclose information about the number of products which are the subject of discussions with manufacturers in relation to the proposed extension of the selected list scheme.

Salmonella

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effect of the implementation of the Food Safety Act 1990 on the incidence of salmonella; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The reported levels of salmonella are affected by a number of factors. These may include increased reporting of foodborne illness, changes in eating patterns and in food handling and hygiene practices. It is therefore extremely difficult to quantify the effect of the implementation of the Food Safety Act as against these other factors.

Welfare Food Outlets

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the likely effect of placing restrictions on the outlets for welfare food and child vitamin supplements on the take-up of these products.

Mr. Sackville: None. The outlets which may supply these products remain those listed in the Welfare Food Amendment Regulations 1988.

Environmental Health Prosecutions

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 217, what plans she has to revise the collection of statistics to make it possible to evaluate the percentage of successful prosecutions brought by environmental health officers.

Mr. Sackville: The statistics enable a comparison to be made between the number of establishments prosecuted under the Food Safety Act 1990 and subordinate legislation and the number of successful convictions. However, it is not possible to determine those taken by environmental health officers. We have no plans to change the form of the statistics which are based on EC requirements.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's estimate of (a) the number of persons who contracted hepatitis C following blood transfusions in the period January 1989 to September 1991, (b) how many of these persons have pursued legal action against the Blood Transfusion Service or any other body in respect of the contraction of post-transfusion hepatitis C and (c) what is the average length of time taken for the settlement of these claims.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available for the Department to make such an estimate. No legal action has been brought against the Department by any person alleging to have contracted hepatitis C through blood transfusion during the specified period.

Information is not available centrally about any actions brought against health authorities.

MMR Vaccine

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence she has on a link between the problem of extreme long sight in children and the administration of the MMR vaccine; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is not aware of any evidence for such a link.

Mr. Mohammed Saeed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 4 May, Official Report, column 65, what safeguards have been introduced, following her departmental inquiry into matters relating to Mohammed Saeed, to prevent unqualified persons from becoming general practitioners; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Mr. Saeed was granted full registration by the General Medical Council in 1961 on the basis of reciprocal agreements with overseas medical schools in place at that time. These agreements are now more restricted in scope and the council's registration procedures have been considerably tightened up. The Department recently issued guidance (EL(92)84) to national health service-employing authorities and family health services authorities reminding them of the need to be sure that procedures for employing doctors involve checks which confirm that they are registered with the General Medical Council and that their registration certificates cover the tasks they are expected to undertake. A copy of the guidance is available in the Library.

Children (Illnesses)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children of each sex aged under 18 years were recorded as having (a) diabetes, (b) asthma, (c) hayfever, (d) eczema and (e) allergic rhinitis in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Food Safety

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the extent to which environmental health officers distinguish clearly between good practice and legal requirements in accordance with the codes issued under section 40 of the Food Safety Act 1990.

Mr. Sackville: The small number of cases which come to the attention of the Department does not enable us to make an assessment of the extent to which environmental health officers distinguish clearly between good practice and legal requirements. Department of Health officials take every opportunity to emphasise the importance of this distinction—through training courses for EHOs, conferences, seminars, and work with the Institution of Environmental Health Officers and the local authorities co-ordinating body on food and trading standards. In addition, the Department wrote, on 6 May, to all chief EHOs in England reminding them of the need to make this distinction. A copy of this letter will be placed in the Library.

Medical Specialists

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the number of new specialists needed to implement fully the report of the working group on specialist medical training and of the real-term cost implications of these new specialists.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report has been issued for consultation so that any decisions on implementation can be taken in the light of comments from all interested parties. Work on the resource implications will be taken forward as part of the consultative process with the objective of implementing any changes without increasing national health service pay bills beyond existing plans.

Maternity Claims

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many maternity claim forms were submitted by general practitioners in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the ratio of operations done by consultants to doctors in the training grades in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Rubella

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were born with congenital rubella syndrome in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The number of cases of confirmed or suspected congenital rubella reported to the national congenital rubella surveillance programme is shown in the table:

Year of birth	Registered by January 1993
1979	not available
1980	36
1981	16
1982	38
1983	68
1984	52
1985	24
1986	29
1987	40
1988	22
1989	13
1990	11
1991	2
1992	[1]6

[1] Includes a set of triplets.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the number of district health authorities which do not provide a comprehensive immunisation service for rubella in schools for girls aged 10 to 14 years.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities which have stopped their programmes of rubella injections at school premises, together with the year in which the programme ceased.

Mr. Sackville: The Government policy is that all girls between their 10th and 14th birthdays should be immunised with single antigen rubella vaccine unless there is documented evidence that they have received measles, mumps and rubella vaccine already. It is for individual health authorities to decide how best to implement this policy; most currently do so through a schools immunisation programme.

The Department of Health does not routinely collect information about local arrangements. However, the Public Health Laboratory Service is to undertake a survey shortly which will establish what arrangements are in place.

Community Care

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her best estimate for the time taken to assess the needs of a patient under the new community care programme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Assessment procedures need to be matched to individual circumstances and will, therefore, vary considerably in length and complexity. We have made it clear to local authorities that assessment processes should be as simple, quick and efficient as possible so that people get the care they need when they need it.

Child Protection Register

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of children of each sex on the child protection register in each year since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: The information available is shown in the table. Information was not collected centrally before 1988.

Number of children on child protection registers in England at 31 March

Year	Boys	Girls
[1]1988	18,700	20,500
1989	19,700	21,400

Diphtheria

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of diphtheria have been reported in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Notified cases of Diphtheria England and Wales 1972-91

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the use of ministerial cars for travel from home to the normal place of employment is regarded for tax purposes by the Department as private use that is merely incidental to the business use of the ministerial car.

Mr. Sackville: Yes.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the work force employed by the national health service within each English health region is registered disabled.

Dr. Mawhinney: Tables showing the number and percentage of registered disabled persons employed by a wide range of public sector employers, including regional health authorities, district health authorities and national health service trusts, are published annually in the Employment Gazette. The figures are published with the agreement of the employers concerned.

The latest figures relating to June 1992 are in the April 1993 edition of the Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of registered disabled people working within her Department and the national health service management executive; what percentage of the total work force of these two bodies this number represents; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: At 11 May 1993, 73 registered disabled people were employed by the Department; this represents 1.4 per cent. of the work force. This includes nine registered disabled people employed in the national health service management executive, representing 1 per cent. of its work force.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the practice of the chief executive of the national health service management executive on response times to correspondence from hon. Members; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The chief executive of the national health service management executive treats all correspondence from hon. Members as a matter of priority and aims to provide a reply as quickly as possible. All letters are acknowledged immediately and a full reply is provided as soon as necessary inquiries are completed.

Diamorphine

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued by her Department to general practitioners and hospitals with regard to the use of the drug diamorphine.

Dr. Mawhinney: Diamorphine is a controlled drug under schedule 2 of the Misuse of Drugs Regulations 1985. Its supply and prescription are therefore subject to certain controls, which are described in the British National Formulary, which is distributed twice a year free of charge to all prescribers by the Department of Health. A copy of the British National Formulary is available in the Library.

Prescribing information on the use of diamorphine is given to general practitioners and hospitals in the British National Formulary and in data sheets for products, issued by the manufacturers and authorised by the Licensing Authority. Guidance is also contained in the "Guide to the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971" and the Misuse of Drugs Regulations.

Quarry House

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the cost of building Quarry house in Leeds and (b) the cost of landscaping around Quarry house.

Mr. Burt: I have been asked to reply.

The total costs of building Quarry house are £55·5 million. This includes the costs of landscaping those areas which are not the responsibility of Leeds city council.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Waste Storage

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions the Atomic Weapons Establishment or other Ministry of Defence personnel have held with Atomic Energy Authority Technology in the last 10 years regarding the possibility of utilising its low-level waste storage sites at either Harwell or Dounreay.

Mr. Aitken: The Atomic Weapons Establishment has not had any discussions with AEA(T) in the last 10 years regarding the possibility of utilising its low-level waste storage sites at either Harwell or Dounreay. However, other branches of my Department currently make use of the storage and disposal facilities available at Harwell and Dounreay.

Aldermaston

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the exact role and function of (a) radiological protection advisory group staff and (b) operational health physicist staff, employed at AWE Aldermaston as referred to in the oral evidence to the Select Committee on Defence at HC 479 of Session 1989-90 Q.10ff, p.2; and if he will list (i) the numbers of these staff employed at AWE Aldermaston in each year since 1970 and (ii) the shortfall in the numbers of these staff in each of those years.

Mr. Aitken: The role and function of AWE radiological protection advisory group staff is to provide advice and support in the areas of radiation dosimetry, radiological requirements for new and operating facilities, monitoring of the environment for radioactive materials, nuclear safety hazards assessments, and responses to radiological incidents.

The role and function of the AWE operational health physics staff is to provide advice on operational health physics aspects of the work undertaken at AWE and also to provide a comprehensive radiological monitoring service for all work undertaken at AWE. Details of the numbers of staff employed during the period 1970-1992 are not held in the form requested, and to provide them would require disproportionate time and cost. However, since the report by Sir Edward Pochin in 1978, the total number of radiological protection staff and health physicist staff has increased by a factor of three.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), of 2 March, Official Report, column 111, if he will list the detailed actions identified by Sir Edward Pochin following his review of radiological health and safety at Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: The detailed actions to which I referred in my answer of 2 March were compiled by AWE—then AWRE—management as a result of the scrutiny of Sir Edward Pochin's report, rather than by Sir Edward Pochin himself. This was an internal management report which, in accordance with our usual practice, has not been released for publication.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) of 6 November, Official Report, column 530, whether the project definition study into the scope of work needed to overcome the corrosion problems of the A91 complex at Aldermaston is now complete; what is the estimated date he now expects A91 to be fully operational; and if he will place a copy of the A91 project definition study in the Library.

Mr. Aitken: The project definition study into the A91 corrosion problems has been completed. The study has identified a range of options and these are currently being evaluated. Until these options have been fully studied, it is not possible to give a forecast date for the facility to become fully operational. The project definition study report contains commercially sensitive information and it would not be appropriate for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on each of the (a) major injuries, (b) other injuries, (c) dangerous occurrences and (d) cases of disease, as defined in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985—SI, 1985, No. 2023—reported to the Health and Safety Executive by AWE Aldermaston during (a) 1976, (b) 1981, (c) 1984 and (d) 1987.

Mr. Aitken: A total of 138 incidents for illness/injury and dangerous occurrences were reported to the Health and Safety Executive, as defined in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985, SI, 1985, No. 2023, by AWE Aldermaston in the years 1976, 1981, 1984 and 1987. Further details of these incidents are as follows: 1976—(a) major injuries (total three)—two fractured fibula; one fractured scafoid (b) other injuries (total 32)—10 falls; four back injuries; seven hand injuries; three stepping on or striking objects; two falls of objects; one facial acid burn; one burns to hands; one dislocated knee; one eye injury; one hernia; one sports injury (c) dangerous occurrences (total one)—one contamination incident and (d) cases of disease (total nil). 1981—(a) major injuries (total four)—one fractured humerus; one fractured radius; two fractured bones (b) other injuries (total 32)—12 falls; eight back pain; five stepping on or striking objects; three road traffic accident; two sports; one fall of object; one handling (c) dangerous occurrences (total nil) and (d) cases of disease (total nil). 1984—(a) major injuries (total one)—one fractured shoulder (b) other injuries (total 22)—10 falls; three road traffic accidents; three back pain; one sports; one fatigue; one splinter in finger; two falls of objects; one cut from handtool (c) dangerous occurrences (total one)—one contamination incident and (d) cases of disease (total nil). 1987 (a)—major injuries (total three)—two fractured wrists; one fractured ribs (b) other injuries (total 38)—14 falls; nine back injuries; four handling; four sports; one fall of objects; two stepping on or striking objects; one eye injury; one handtool injury; one road traffic accident; one damaged ribs (c) dangerous occurrences (total one)—leakage from effluent pipeline and (d) cases of disease (total nil).

Waste Management

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by his Department in tackling the issues listed in paragraph 6.9, page 79 of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Council 12th annual report of 1991.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has a number of research programmes in hand to address the issues to which the hon. Member refers.

Contracts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of defence contracts to his Department are provided from (a) Wales, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) abroad, respectively; and if he will publish an annual figure in each case.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to tables 1.11 and 1.13 of "Defence Statistics", 1992 edition, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Explosives

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigation will be made regarding the explosive device found in the sea off Coll; if the results of the inquiry will be published; what steps have been taken to inform and protect west coast fishermen, Caledonian MacBrayne and merchant shipping operating in the area of the risks from explosive devices; if he will give details of the type of ordnance recovered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Investigation has established that the item in question was an inert training device. Though the device contained a quantity of detonating cord, this posed no appreciable risk to fishermen or to shipping. These devices are usually recovered after each exercise.

Navy Commanders (Re-employment)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any former Royal Navy commander now employed by Rolls-Royce and Associates has been hired back by the MOD, Navy Department, to carry out the same duties that he previously discharged as an officer in the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, but a Rolls-Royce and Associates employee, a former Royal Navy commander previously involved in the management of the Trident works facilities at the Clyde submarine base, Faslane, has been engaged to provide some essential short-term assistance to the Department's shiplift project team.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the number of British troops currently serving under the United Nations flag in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) on 20 April, Official Report, column 165.

Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) civilian and (b) military patients were treated in each of the last three years for which figures are available at the Queen Elizabeth military hospital, Woolwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is contained in the table.

	1990	1991	1992
In Patients
Military	4,785	4,848	4,882
Civilian	8,288	7,657	5,909
Out Patients
Military	10,596	12,071	7,987
Civilian	15,258	13,312	12,931

Munitions Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) of 22 April, Official Report, column 191, if he will publish as much information in regard to the shipping of munitions in the eastern Mediterranean on his Department's behalf as can be given without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not held centrally within the Department and no information can be provided without disproportionate cost.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of his Department in respect of the proposed design and height of the Skye bridge, with particular reference to any emergency defence planning provisions which may arise involving the passage under the bridge of the largest naval vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has been fully consulted over the specifications for the Skye bridge and is content that the design and height of the bridge is consistent with defence requirements for passage of the Kyle of Lochalsh.

Personnel (Eastern Europe)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) of 22 April, Official Report, column 191, if he will estimate the total number of serving personnel together with members of their families in (a) Germany, (b) Poland, (c) Lithuania, (d) Latvia, (e) Estonia, (f) Georgia and (g) Moldavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In addition to the numbers of Russian military personnel stationed in Germany, Poland, the Baltic Republic and Georgia I gave in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) on 22 April, Official Report, column 191, there are some 9,000 personnel stationed in Moldavia. The number of family members will be in proportion to the size of the forces, but it is not possible to provide an accurate estimate.

Bosnia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 149, whether the United Nations will be reimbursing the costs of transporting the Prince of Wales's Own Regiment's Warrior armoured vehicles to Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Nations assumed financial responsibility for UNPROFOR operations in Bosnia with effect from 1 April 1993. The handling of individual cost elements will be a matter for negotiation.

HMS Avenger

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the proposed visit of HMS Avenger to Chile was cancelled; what would have been the additional fuel cost involved; what was the purpose of the proposed visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It had originally been planned that HMS Avenger would return from patrol in the south Atlantic via the Pacific ocean and Panama canal, and that she would take the opportunity to pay an informal, goodwill visit to Chile later this month. In the light of constraints on fuel usage and of higher priority claims on the fleet's resources, including commitments in the Adriatic, however, it was decided Avenger should return directly to the United Kingdom via the Atlantic saving fuel costs of around £140,000.

The cancellation of the visit to Chile has not affected the close relations which exist between the Royal Navy and the Chilean Navy. Royal Navy ships have visited Chile regularly in the past and will continue to do so.

European Fighter Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the current total estimated cost of (a) the development and (b) the production of the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish the latest estimates of the costs associated with the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The current estimated cost of EF2000 development to the United Kingdom is some £3·4 billion. Production is likely to cost £8·3 billion at current prices. The estimated total project cost, comprising the costs of development, production and integrated logistic support, is some £13·1 billion. After allowances made for inflation, the real increase in project costs since the start of development is less than 10 per cent., which is unwelcome but not unexpected for a collaborative project of this magnitude and technical complexity.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current estimated maintenance costs for one European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It is not possbile to be certain about the operating cost, including maintenance and repair, until a substantial number of development flying hours have been accumulated. However, the contractual specification for the aircraft calls for a significantly better level of reliability than for current RAF in-service aircraft.

Belize

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of military helicopters in Belize in relation to the incident in early April involving Guatemalan intruders stealing mahogany trees from Belize territory.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It appears that this relatively minor incident involved trees illegally felled in Guatemala. The commander British forces Belize authorised the use of military helicopters to transport service personnel and to visit the area in question accompanied by representatives of Belizean agencies involved. Belize defence force deployments were by means of their own transport aircraft. I understand that the Belizean and Guatemalan Governments have resolved the incident to their mutual satisfaction.

Western European Union

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual expenditure of the WEU, and the United Kingdom's total budget contributions to this expenditure; what forecasts have been made of future expenditure and of the United Kingdom contribution towards it; and how much is attributable to the costs connected with its move to Brussels, including the provision of buildings and other facilities there.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I have been asked to reply.

At current rates of exchange, the WEU budget for 1993 is £24·1 million. The United Kingdom share of this is £4·1 million. Forecast expenditure for 1994 is £22·7 million, of which the United Kingdom share will be £3·86 million.

The total budgeted cost of the transfer of the WEU secretariat to Brussels, including the provision of buildings and facilities, was £4·55 million, of which the United Kingdom share was £773,000.

Army Pay and Personnel Unit

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many sites are currently being considered for the new location of the Army pay and personnel unit;

(2) how many military and civilian posts will be allocated to the Army pay and personnel unit.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 4 March, Official Report, column 229, I announced that representations received during the consultation period which followed the decision to locate the Army personnel centre in Glasgow would be considered before final decisions were made. A detailed review of the available options has been undertaken and I am now in a position to report the outcome. The review was conducted against the requirement that the Army personnel centre, comprising some 1,300 military and civilian personnel, should be located in the vicinity of one of the six existing Army manning, record and pay offices at Glasgow, Chester, York, Leicester, Ashton-under-Lyne and Exeter. The opportunity was also taken to review what alternative existed to a new purchase or lease of office accommodation.

The review considered all the options against common criteria and in particular all the costs involved, which in the case of existing commercial buildings included both the initial purchase price and costs of modification and any minor build required. The outcome was to show that the total cost of locating the Army personnel centre in existing Ministry of Defence office accommodation in Glasgow at Kentigern house would be some £6 million; that the overall cost of the building in Stockport referred to in my answer on 4 March would be some £15 million; that of the commercial building in Glasgow which formed the original proposal some £25 million; and the total cost of other options for an existing commercial building or new build would be in the range between £14 million and £24 million. Accordingly, in view of the significant saving over other options, I have concluded that, subject to consultation with the trades unions, siting the centre in Kentigern house represents the best possible value for money. The aim will be to complete the relocation during 1995.

Kentigern house was purpose built to Ministry of Defence requirements; with some modification to its internal layout, returning the building to open plan office space, together with the application of new office space guidelines, it will be possible to meet the key requirements of the Army personnel centre. The accommodation will be sufficient to house the centre in its entirety, and with the additional flexibility offered by Wellesley house, all MOD staff based in Glasgow will be accommodated satisfactorily. A consultative document has been prepared and is being passed to the trades unions. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The consultation period will last until 25 June and I hope to make a final decision shortly after that taking into account the representations received.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates (Resignations)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates resigned for reasons other than age in each quarter since January 1988.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In the Lord Chancellor's area of responsibility, the figures for each of the quarters referred to, save for this year and the first quarter of 1992 cannot be given without disproportionate cost. Figures for the Duchy of Lancaster, where available, are shown in brackets. The number of losses for the years in the question and for the first quarter of 1992 and 1993, but excluding those justices who reached the statutory retirement age, are as follows:

	Number
1988	659
1989	799
1990	794
1991	820 (167)
	First quarter
1992	256 (40)
1992	1,034 (165)
	First quarter
1993	261 (37)

EDUCATION

Osteopathy

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what sources of funding are available to students who wish to pursue osteopathy courses.

Mr. Boswell: Students on designated full-time first degree and equivalent level courses in osteopathy are eligible for a mandatory award and a student loan on the terms prescribed in the relevant regulations. Other students may apply to their local education authority for a discretionary award, the availability and amount of which is for the authority to determine.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration he is giving to the report from the National Curriculum Council: "Special Needs and the national curriculum: Opportunity and Challenge"; if he will extend the national curriculum to take account of the recommendation of this report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: This leaflet, which the National Curriculum Council has recently sent to my right hon. Friend, summarises a wide-ranging review of issues concerning the relationship of pupils with special educational needs to the national curriculum. It highlights some important matters and suggests some ways forward for schools.

The national curriculum is appropriate for the great majority of children. A very small number may not be able to study across the whole of its range, or reach the levels generally appropriate to their age, and arrangements are in place to allow the modification of the curriculum as appropriate to each individual child.

In respect of exceptionally able children, there is no need for the modification of the curriculum to enable them to work at an appropriate pace and challenge, since the national curriculum sets out only a minimum entitlement, and schools are free to extend this work with individual children.

My right hon. Friend agrees with the National Curriculum Council that involvement in the national curriculum in itself means that pupils' entitlement to a broad and balanced curriculum is addressed.

Conductive Education

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will publish the report by Birmingham university on the effectiveness of conductive education as practised at the Institute for Conductive Education in Birmingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I am pleased to be able to announce that the full report, containing a description of the methodology of the research and details of its findings, will be published today. Copies of the report are being placed in the Library of the House.

Teachers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the figures for teacher numbers and vacancies for January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: The annual survey of teacher numbers and vacancies shows that teacher numbers in England rose between January 1992 and January 1993, and that the vacancy rates in January 1993 were the lowest ever recorded. Vacancies have fallen to only 1,343 this year. This is good news for schools. It represents a further 30 per cent. fall in vacancies, to little more than one vacancy for every 20 schools. The fall is even more marked in mathematics, science and modern foreign languages. Provisional teacher numbers in LEA-maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools and self-governing state schools rose by 0·2 per cent. from 394,900 full-time equivalent teachers in January 1992 to 395,600. The estimated overall pupil to teacher ratio is 17·66:1.

I am placing fuller details of the vacancy figures in the Library.

TRANSPORT

Reclaim the Streets Campaign

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which Ministers in his Department have received a London Transport travelcard from the Reclaim the Streets Action Campaign; and what use each of those Ministers who received one made of the card for official journeys by (a) bus (b) tube or (c) rail in the week including 15 May.

Mr. Norris: I and my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport have received London Transport travelcards from the Reclaim the Streets Action Campaign. It would not be appropriate to accept these cards. We shall therefore be returning them to the campaign organisers.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much revenue will be raised from vehicle excise duty in 1993.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The latest forecast for the financial year 1993-94 is £3,690 million net.

Oxleas Wood

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department expects to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Greenwich concerning Oxleas wood, dated 13 October 1992 and 3 March 1993.

Mr. Norris: I have written today to the hon. Member to explain that I had thought it right to delay my reply until matters in the Court of Appeal and with the European Commission have been resolved.

Crossrail

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the reports commissioned from private consultants concerning the crossrail proposals.

Mr. Norris: No. The reports contain commercially sensitive information. If it is decided that crossrail should proceed as a joint venture with the private sector, a great deal of the information will be published.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to make an announcement as to the location of the new midlands channel tunnel terminal.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter for British Rail in co-operation with the private sector. The Government have no plans at present to make an announcement.

Buses

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the level of pollution from diesel exhaust emissions of buses one year old up to seven years old.

Mr. Freeman: No assessment has been made which specifically addresses pollution arising from buses. However, the Department has an extensive research programme looking at control technology and other measures to reduce emissions. In the light of the results of this research, the Government will consider the need for a feasibility of establishing emission requirements for specific categories of vehicles, for example buses, operating in the urban environment.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of buses currently in operation which are not controlled by European Community legislation on account of the age of the vehicle.

Mr. Freeman: There is currently no European Community legislation relating specifically to the construction of buses, although buses are affected by a number of EC directives setting technical standards for varous aspects of motor vehicles. We have no estimate of the number of buses affected, which will depend on the precise requirements of the many directives in question, the date on which they came into effect and the manner in which they are applied in United Kingdom law.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Safety

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the cost to the food industry in a full year of implementing the Food Safety Act 1990.

Mr. Soames: The Food Safety Act 1990 is an enabling piece of legislation which, of itself, does not require any additional expenditure by food businesses. The requirements that it places directly on businesses relating to food safety and consumer protection are couched in general terms, and are no more than any prudent well-run business would involve itself in as part of ensuring its good reputation with its customers. It is, therefore, not possible specifically to identify the cost to the industry of complying with the Act.

Research Strategy Documents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many copies of his departmental reports on (a) Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food environmental research strategy and requirement document 1993-95 and (b) Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food arable crops and horticulture research strategy document 1993-95 have been printed; at what cost; and to whom they have been distributed.

Mr. Curry: One thousand five hundred copies of (a) the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food environmental research strategy and requirement document 1993-95 and 800 copies of (b) Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food arable crops and horticulture research strategy document 1993-95 have been printed, at a total cost of £3,880. They have been distributed to contractors and other parties known to have an interest in research and development, and publicised more widely by means of a press notice.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to seek the adoption in the European Community of siphoning on transfers of milk quotas so as to provide a pool of quotas for new entrants under the age of 40 years into farming in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: The Government have no plans to do so. However, we shall be looking to see whether any lessons for milk quotas may be drawn from experience in the operation of quotas in the sheep and suckler cow sectors, where arrangements for new entrants have been proposed.

Research Expenditure

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what cuts in expenditure in near-market strategic and basic research have been implemented since 1978; and if he will list the size of his Ministry's budget and the numbers of projects and personnel employed with respect to each of the subject areas outlined in "MAFF NR 143/91" in nominal and real terms for each year since 1978.

Mr. Gummer: Research projects are not classified routinely in the terms specified in the question. However, near-market projects, by definition, would seldom, if ever, be expected to fall into the strategic or basic research categories.

My Department's expenditure in cash and real terms on environmental R and D by subject area is set out in the table. The number of projects is shown in brackets. Individual projects differ in value.

Figures for years before 1991-92 are not available in the form requested.

No information is held centrally about the number of personnel employed on each subject area.

Bovine Eyes

Mr. Roger Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether bovine eyes are used in food for human consumption in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I am aware of the suggestion that bovine eyes are used in meat products. All the main meat industry organisations have assured me that they have no evidence of any use of bovine eyes in food. Moreover, the British Meat Manufacturers Association has pointed out that under its accredited standard scheme eyes are totally banned from use in meat preparations and meat products by their members.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Electricity

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to privatise the Northern Ireland electricity service; what estimate of asset proceeds he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The first phase of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in Northern Ireland—the trade sale of the four existing power stations to three private sector companies—was completed in March 1992. The second phase—the floatation of Northern Ireland Electricity plc on the stock exchange—is due to take place in June 1993. The sale of the four power stations realised some £350 million. It is too early to provide an estimate of proceeds from the floatation of NIE plc, details of which will be announced in due course.

Fishing Permits

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce a concessionary rate game fishing permit for pensioners for Northern Ireland at the same level as is applicable in Great Britain.

Mr. Hanley: No. The legislation which governs angling licensing in Northern Ireland does not provide the flexibility to issue licences at concessionary rates except, in limited circumstances, to outside visitors.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Tests

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister when he now expects the report by the National Radiological Protection Board into the effects of radiation on veterans of British nuclear tests to be published; how this relates to the orginal envisaged publication date; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The National Radiological Protection Board anticipates that a report will be sent for peer review to a recognised scientific journal in the late summer or early autumn of 1993, with a view to publication as soon as possible thereafter later in the year.

Delays have been caused by changes in scope made by the National Radiological Protection Board to update their final report. These changes include the incorporation of all deaths of participants up to 1 January 1991 rather than 1 January 1989 as originally envisaged and of a detailed case study into the effects of emigration and a more complete check of mortality and cause of death.

The Government are not aware of any evidence which would change the conclusions of the National Radiological Protection Board report published in 1988 that the overall incidence of cancer among nuclear test participants is no greater than that among the population as a whole.

Child Migrant Trust

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister when he received the letter of 4 May from Nottinghamshire county council regarding the Child Migrant Trust; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The letter was received on 6 May and was acknowledged.

Ms Beata Brookes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister what reference he has made to the public appointments unit in relation to the appointment of Ms Beata Brookes as chairman of the Welsh Consumer Council in 1991; what account he has taken of whether the chairman of the Wales area of the Conservative and Unionist party carries out executive duties; and how his policy on such appointments has changed since his answer of 28 November 1991, Official Report, column 608.

The Prime Minister: The public appointments unit is consulted in seeking nominations for all appointments to public boards, including the chairmanship of the Welsh Consumer Council, as are a number of other bodies. As chairwoman of the Wales area of the Conservative and Unionist party, Miss Brookes is not an officer carrying out executive duties in the party. Her role does not, therefore, conflict with the long-standing and now publicly available guidelines for members of public boards on political activities. This is in line with the answer I gave on 28 November at column 608.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Allivane International

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 May 1992, Official Report,column 77, whether Customs and Excise has decided upon prosecution against Allivane International.

Sir John Cope: No prosecution has been commenced against Allivane International.

Indirect Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the retail prices index is expected to rise as a result of the increase in indirect taxes in the current Budget; and if he will disregard the effect of that increase on the rate of inflation in formulating his economic policies.

Mr. Portillo: The Budget measures add ¼ per cent. to the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments in 1993 compared with the autumn statement forecast, and a further ½ per cent. by the second quarter of 1994.

The Government's objective is to keep underlying inflation within a range of 1 to 4 per cent., and to bring it down to the lower part of this range by the end of this Parliament; monetary policy will be set to achieve this.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward legislation to extend 100 per cent. of inheritance tax relief in respect of farms which are let.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Interest Rates

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current base rate in each EC member state.

Mr. Nelson: Short-term market interest rates in each European Community country were as follows on 12 May:

	Interest rates
United Kingdom	5·8
Germany	7·4
France	7·8
Italy	11·0
Spain	15·4
Netherlands	7·5
Belgium	7·2
Denmark	10·9
Greece	23·0
Portugal	18·0
Ireland	8·1

Inflation

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current rate of inflation in each EC member state.

Mr. Nelson: Data for inflation rates in each European Community country are published in the OECD's main economic indicators. The latest figures show that only Denmark of the European Community countries has a lower headline inflation rate than the United Kingdom.

Gilts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about information on gilts and the gilt-edged market.

Mr. Nelson: The Bank of England will be issuing on 17 May a new guide providing information for institutional investors about gilts and the operation of the gilt-edged market.

The costs of producing the booklet will fall to the Treasury's 1993-94 vote—class XVII, vote 1. parliamentary approval for this new expenditure will be sought in a summer supplementary estimate. The resulting increase in the Treasury's cash limit and gross running costs limit will be fully offset by a reduction in the Bank of England's cash limit and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), of 26 February, Official Report, column 764, whether the rules regarding the provision of car benefits are in practice implemented for Ministers in exactly the same way as the Inland Revenue expects them to be implemented for employees in general.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 13 May 1993]: The same rules apply to Ministers as to other employees, and the Inland Revenue seeks to apply the law even-handedly to Ministers and to others.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage increase for each of the 10 commodities whose prices have increased the most on the commodities markets since the pound left the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 May 1993]: Of the 30 main commodities that make up The Economist all-items commodity price index, the 10 that have increased in price the most since the 15 September 1992 are shown in the table.

Commodity price rises: 15 September 1992 to 5 May 1993

Company Cars

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what benefits-in-kind an employer should report on the form P11D in respect of an employee who is driven from home to his normal place of employment in a chauffeur-driven car provided by his employer.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 May 1993]: If the car is a pooled car and the journeys are merely incidental to the business use of the car, the employer should make no return.

In other circumstances, the employer should return on form P11D the benefit of the car and the costs of the chauffeur.

Whether or not an employee's private use of a car is incidental to its business use will depend on the facts of each particular case. If employers or employees are in any doubt about the correct treatment, they should consult their tax office.

European Community (Convergence)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what requests he has received from institutions of the European Community for a report on their programme for attaining convergence within the economies of the Community; what reply has been sent; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Nelson [pursuant to his reply, 30 March 1993, c. 147]: The United Kingdom has today submitted a convergence programme. A copy of this programme is being placed in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if Ministers in his Department are ordinarily allocated their own ministerial car.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 13 May 1993]: Ministers are provided with first-call cars from the Government car service pool.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Hosni E. Farhat

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received regarding the implications for administrative routines within the Law Officers Department of the case of Hosni E. Farhat.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has on contacts between prosecution witnesses in the case of Hosni E. Farhat and Ahmed Gaddafi Aidain of Libya; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: None.

Unemployment Benefit (Appeals)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General how many appeals relating to unemployment benefit were heard by social security appeals tribunals in 1992; and in how many cases the appeal succeeded wholly or in part.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 11 May 1993]: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not available in the form requested. The latest information, which covers the first nine months of 1992, indicates that 12,327 unemployment benefit appeals were heard and decided of which 5,310 were decided in the appellant's favour.

HEALTH

Regional Health Authorities (Consultancy Companies)

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to recover inappropriate loans and illegal payments to consultancy companies and related businesses employed by regional health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: Recovery action is a matter for the authorities concerned. The Department closely monitors progress.

GP Fund Holders

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the reasons for excluding terminations of pregnancy from the list of goods and services which general practitioner fund holders may purchase elsewhere when they are not available locally; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The list of goods and services is currently limited to procedures which all fund holders are required to purchase on behalf of their patients where clinically indicated. Some general practitioners for ethical reasons are unable to refer patients for termination of pregnancy and such GPs could not be required to purchase these services.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued to health authorities and general practice fund holders on the purchase of complementary and alternative medical services.

Dr. Mawhinney: Our guidance makes it clear that we expect general practitioner fund holders to purchase high-quality and cost-effective care. We have not issued guidance on purchasing specific services as this is a matter of clinical judgment. Fund holders may employ alternative practitioners using the staff element of their fund.

Child Mortality

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of deaths of children under 18 years by age and sex, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

Numbers of deaths of children under 18 years of age in England and Wales by age and sex registered in the years 1979 to 1991

Consultants

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) male and (b) female consultants are working between one and 11 sessions per week, broken down by number of sessions.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Hospital medical consultants by contracted notional half-days (NHD) England—30 September 1991

Note:
(a) Figures do not include honorary consultants
(b) Totals do not add due to rounding up/down
(c) Both full-time and maximum part-time consultants are shown as working 11 NHDs.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) male and (b) female consultants are working part and full time.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table.

Hospital medical consultants by sex and nature of contract England (whole-time equivalent) 30 September 1991

	Consultants: Male	Female	Total
Full time	6,328	1,452	7,780
Maximum part time	4,563	377	4,940
Part time	1,004	500	1,504
Total	11,895	2,329	14,224

Note: Figures do not include honorary consultants.

Pharmacists

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to reject any proposals to end payments of allowances to pharmacists who dispense fewer than 2,000 prescriptions a month.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are exploring a range of options for restructuring pharmacists' pay. Consultations are continuing and no options have yet been ruled out.

Pharmacies (West Midlands)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of pharmacies in the west midlands; and how many dispense fewer than 2,000 prescriptions a month.

Dr. Mawhinney: In the west midlands, all the 227 pharmacists dispensed fewer than 2,000 prescriptions a month in 1991-92, the latest year for which figures are available.

NHS Patients

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many in-patients were treated by the national health service in England in 1992 and in 1979;

(2) how many out-patients were treated by the national health service in England in 1992 and in 1979.

Mr. Sackville: In 1991-92, there were 7,759,000 in-patients and 36,941,000 out-patients treated in the NHS in England. This information is based on counts of finished consultant episodes. In 1979, 5,400,000 in-patients and 34,100,000 out-patients were treated. In-patient information for 1979 is based on numbers of discharges and deaths and is, therefore, not directly comparable.

Operations

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations the national health service performed in England in 1992 and in 1979.

Mr. Sackville: In 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available, an estimated 3·8 million non-maternity operations were performed in the national health service in England. The information is based on counts of finished consultant episodes. In 1979, there were 2·5 million non-maternity operations. Information for 1979 is based on numbers of discharges and deaths and is, not therefore, directly comparable.

Deaf People (Sight Tests)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which representatives of deaf and hard of hearing people she consulted prior to her decision to exclude them from free sight tests;

(2) what representations she received from deaf and hard of hearing people concerning the introduction of charges for eye tests.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are not aware that any representations were made by deaf and hard of hearing people when charges for sight tests were introduced on 1 April 1989; nor were their representatives consulted.

Organ Transplants

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many transplants were carried out in the years 1991 and 1992 of (a) kidneys, (b) hearts, (c) livers and (d) hearts and lungs;

(2) what estimate she has of how many people died in the years 1991 and 1992 while waiting for organ transplants.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the numbers of solid organ transplants carried out in the United Kingdom in 1991 and 1992[1].

Year	Cadaveric kidneys	Hearts	Livers	Hearts and lungs	Lungs
1991	1,628	281	420	79	72
1992	1,641	301	501	53	89

[1] Figures supplied by United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority. 1992 figures are provisional.

There are no figures available centrally on people who die while waiting for kidney transplantation, but in 1991, the only year for which such figures are available, deaths of people awaiting other organs were as follows: hearts 69, livers 33, hearts and lungs 41, lungs 16[1]. Causes of death are not recorded.

Sefton General Hospital

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are treated annually at Sefton general hospital's chest clinic; how wide is the catchment area from which they are drawn; how many staff are employed in the unit; where it is to be relocated; what is the future of the jobs of the clinic staff; and what estimate has been made of travelling times and costs of patients currently being treated at Sefton general.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. Tod, the chairman of Liverpool health authority, for details.

Computers

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual expenditure within the national health service on (a) computers in hospital and (b) computers in general practice for each year since 1990.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 27 April 1993]: The available information for 1990-91 and 1991-92 is shown in the table.

b. 1991-92 annual financial returns of the first wave NHS Trusts.

c. Financial information system (FIS) returns of family health services authorities (1990-91 and 1991-92).

Notes to the table:

1. HCHS covers all services directly managed or accounted for by the health authorities (and NHS Trusts) including hospital, community health, patient transport (ie ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.

2. The HCHS figures for 1991-92 (which are derived from annual financial returns rather than accounts) are provisional. Following the introduction of capital asset accounting and changes to the analyses provided in annual financial returns the figure for capital expenditure is not comparable with that for 1990-91. It represents expenditure only on mainframe information technology (IT) systems and excludes additional expenditure on computers within a total of some £103·5 million for "office and IT equipment" and which is not separately identifiable centrally. Revenue "purchases" may include elements for rent and leasing.

3. The figures for general medical services are the costs of direct reimbursements made by family health service authorities to general medical practitioners for computers.

4. The table excludes costs incurred by family health services authorities on their administrative functions etc., and by special health authorities providing central services to the national health service.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability, Living Allowance

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the turnround of correspondence relating to disability living allowance applications met his targets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The arrangements for replying to correspondence relating to operational questions on disability living allowance are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 13 May 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the targets for the turnround of correspondence on Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

I would refer to my letter to you of 25 February 1993 in response to an earlier question from you on this matter (Official Report 25 February 1993, Column 751). As I explained in that letter, the Agency is responding to the majority of letters on DLA now being received from Members within 20 working days. In April 61 per cent. of the letters I sent on DLA were within the 20 day target. In additiion the DLA Unit is now responding within 20 working days on 79 per cent. of the letters they receive direct from Members.

The percentage of cases cleared within 20 days is continuing to increase. It is my firm intention that by the end of May the vast majority of letters on DLA will be replied to within the 20 day target.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report and a copy will also be placed in the Library.

Child Benefit

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings would be made by restricting child benefit to households which have total incomes of (a) 80 per cent., (b) 100 per cent., (c) 120 per cent. of (i) average earnings and (ii) average household income.

Mr. Burt: If child benefit were restricted to households with less than (a) 80 per cent., (b) 100 per cent., and (c) 120 per cent. of average gross male earnings, it is estimated that benefit savings of (a) £4 billion, (b) £3·2 billion and (c) £2·4 billion would accrue.

If child benefit were restricted to households with less than (a) 80 per cent., (b) 100 per cent., and (c) 120 per cent. of average gross household income, it is estimated that benefit savings of (a) £3·9 billion, (b) £3 billion and (c) £2·2 billion would accrue.

The estimates are made at 1993-94 levels, based on 1988, 1989, and 1990 family expenditure surveys, and the 1992 new earnings survey. The estimates assume that families in receipt of income-related benefits are not compensated for any loss in child benefit.

WALES

Council House Sales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been total sales proceeds from the sale of council houses in Wales to date since 1981; and how much has been (a) allocated from proceeds to develop social housing and (b) held in local authority bank accounts or short-term investments.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Between 1 April 1981 and 31 March 1992, receipts including the repayment of principal on local authority mortgages from the sale of council housing amounted to £793 million. Information on the allocation of the receipts from the sale of council housing to develop social housing and the amounts held in local authority bank accounts or short-term investments is not held centrally.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated asset base of local authority housing stock in Wales net of debt.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the value of local authority housing stock is not collected centrally. However, the national value of housing revenue account dwellings at 1 April 1993, net of accumulated debt, was assumed, for HRA subsidy purposes only, to be £4·5 billion.

Consultancy Services

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the operation of and future of consultancy services provided under the enterprise initiative in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The consultancy services available under the enterprise initiative are provided by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and delivered in Wales on his behalf by the Welsh Development Agency. On 10 March, my right hon. Friend announced that the scheme will continue until 31 March 1994 with reduced rates of subsidy, thus allowing development of a new and more flexible package of support services within the available resources.

Small Businesses

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to encourage the growth of the small business sector in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: As well as helping entrepreneurs set up new businesses through the business start-up programme, I support a broad range of measures designed to help existing small businesses to grow. Measures include regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grant, Enterprise Wales consultancy support, overseas trade missions and export advice, skills development support and technology initiatives.

In October 1992, I set up the enterprise and business support working group with representatives from the public and private sectors. The group has been comprehensively reviewing business support services in Wales and will shortly be making recommendations, particularly about improving access for the small business man to available assistance. A range of other measures which assist the small business sector include:

Regional Selective Assistance, Regional Enterprise Grant

Small businesses continue to take advantage of the help available under regional selective assistance. In the year to end of April 1993, 124 small firms, employing up to 200 people, accepted offers of RSA. The value of these offers amount to £21·7 million. A further 156 small firms, employing fewer than 25 people, or 50 in the case of innovation projects, accepted offers of regional enterprise grant totalling £2·24 million.

Enterprise Wales

Launched in January 1988, the consultancy initiatives have proved extremely popular in Wales. More than 6,476 companies have applied. In 1992-93 alone, 1,299 applicants were received, 30 per cent. above the economic weight, and 1,186 business reviews were commissioned, 42 per cent. above the economic weight.

Overseas Trade Services
My Department's overseas trade services branch provides in Wales those export advisory services which are made available by the Department of Trade and Industry in England. In addition, I have recently introduced for small and medium-sized enterprises based in Wales, a programme of 24 subsidised trade missions over the next three years.
A trade fair representative service, which allows small firms to place their literature at selected trade fairs, which I initiated last year, has already begun to pay dividends for many of the participating firms.

Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology (SMART)
The number of small Welsh companies which received a SMART stage 1 award during the past 12 months was 16, and nine companies received the SMART stage 2 awards. The maximum value of each stage 1 award is £45,000 and the maximum award is £60,000. On a per-capita basis, Wales has continued to do better than most other regions in this annual competition, receiving about 9 per cent. of the total awards nationwide.

Support for Products Under Research (SPUR)
This scheme, which was introduced in 1991 is intended to support highly innovative projects by companies employing up to 500 persons. During the second year of its operation, offers of financial assistance were made to nine Welsh companies, to a total value of £960,443.

Managing in the 90s
Managing in the 90s is an umbrella scheme encompassing a number of programmes designed to encourage the growth of small and medium sized businesses. Initially focusing on four areas of industrial performance—design, production, purchasing and quality—it has recently been expanded to include marketing and new product introduction.

WDA and DBRW
The Welsh Development Agency provides established small businesses with advice and financial support to assist their growth, helps them to establish business links in other EC countries and helps them to exploit new technologies. The agency also seeks to ensure that an adequate supply of industrial and commercial workspace is available.
The Development Board for Rural Wales has delivered a comprehensive programme to stimulate interest in business creation and to help business start-ups. This has been achieved by establishing a network of seven business centres in partnership with the region's local authorities and local enterprise agencies. In 1992-93 the agencies provided a total of £273,000 in direct grant support to Wales's 22 local enterprise agencies.

Training and Enterprise Councils
The training and enterprise councils in Wales are responsible for running a range of measures which assist small businesses. They are continuing to develop provision to help new and existing businesses to acquire and build on skills which will enable them to compete and grow. During the last financial year, Welsh TECs trained more than 12,700 owner-managers and helped more than 2,676 people to start their own new businesses. In addition TECs handled over 41,000 inquiries through business information services and provided 8,800 counselling sessions for new and existing small businesses.

Disability Payments

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to empower local authorities in Wales to make direct payments to people with disabilities following the completion of needs assessments.

Mr. David Hunt: No. Now is not the time to be adding to local authorities' very full agendas. Direct payments are, and should continue to be, the province of the social security system.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Welsh Office made known the necessity of completion of the integrated administration and control system forms to Welsh farmers and the farming unions.

Mr. David Hunt: Following the publication in December of the Commission regulations on the integrated administration and control system, Agriculture Departments issued a joint press notice on 13 January announcing further details of the claim procedures for arable aid payments. In the same notice, we alerted livestock producers to the fact that they, too, would need to comply with the general arrangements relating to IACS.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what day the European Community directive for the preparation of integrated administration and control system forms was communicated to the Welsh Office.

Mr. David Hunt: The governing Commission regulations were published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 31 December 1992.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Welsh Office made known to Welsh farmers and the farming unions that the integrated administration and control system forms should be completed using black ink; and when that requirement was communicated to the Welsh Office by the European Commission.

Mr. David Hunt: The explanatory booklet on the integrated administration and control system, available from 2 April, advises farmers to make copies of the forms they submit and, therefore, recommends that they are completed clearly and in black ink in order to make photocopying easier.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Toxic Waste Exports

Ms Abbott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the forms of industrial toxic waste exported from the United Kingdom and their destinations, identifying third world destinations separately, and the quantities involved, over the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to her of 19 April 1993, Official Report, column 44.

Animal Experimentation (Cosmetics)

Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to support any moves to strengthen the common position on the proposed cosmetics directive with respect to the phasing out of cosmetic tests on animals when it is discussed by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Leigh: The common position on the proposed sixth Council amendment to the EC cosmetics directive agreed by the member states under the United Kingdom presidency last year represents a fair and reasonable balance between the concerns of those who wish to phase out testing on animals of the ingredients of personal care products and the need to protect the consumer by ensuring that alternative non-animal tests are validated. I do not believe there is scope for strengthening the measure without jeopardising the proposal as a whole.

Trading Standards

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost to British industry of implementing the trading standards regulations.

Mr. Leigh: No such estimate has yet been made. However, as part of the deregulation initiative, the Department of Trade and Industry is reviewing all the regulations for which it is responsible.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many prosecutions were brought by trading standards officers in each of the last five years; and what percentage of (a) cases and (b) contested cases resulted in prosecution.

Mr. Leigh: In England and Wales the numbers of prosecutions brought by trading standards departments have been as follows:

	Numbers
1987-88	10,921
1988-89	12,682
1989-90	9,921
1990-91	10,469
1991-92	10,425

In Scotland, the numbers of prosecutions resulting from investigations made by standards trading departments and brought by the Crown through the procurators fiscal have been as follows:

	Numbers
1987-88	355
1988-89	383
1989-90	300
1990-91	220
1991-92	267

Information about the number and outcome of comparable prosecutions in Northern Ireland and about the outcome of prosecutions in England, Wales and Scotland is not readily available.

Deregulation Task Forces

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what remuneration or other benefits and expenses the members of the deregulation task forces receive; and on what basis such remunerations were calculated.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The chairmen and members of the deregulation task forces receive no remuneration, but are eligible to apply for travel and subsistence expenses on standard civil service terms.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade from what date the six months life of the deregulation task forces is regarded as commencing.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The deregulation task forces were launched on 19 March 1993.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the membership of each deregulation task force, and the approximate number of regulations allocated to each task force.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A complete list of deregulation task force members has been placed in the Library. Each task force has been surveying the whole range of Government regulation as it applies to its sector.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it will be open to deregulation task forces to propose extensions of existing legal provisions.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The deregulation task forces are free to make any recommendations they wish, within their broad remit to advise Ministers on priorities for deregulation and on ensuring a continuing voice for business in the regulatory process.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if it is his intention to publish the reports of the deregulation task forces.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The deregulation task forces will not be producing formal reports. They will be giving advice to Ministers which will feed into the public debate on deregulation.

Car Exports

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many cars were exported from Britain to Japan in 1978 and in 1992.

Mr. Needham: In 1992, more than 11,700 passenger cars were exported from Britain to Japan, compared with almost 3,400 cars exported to Japan in 1978.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Darling: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the number of commitment wells required to be drilled by each licensee in each United Kingdom continental shelf sector under existing licences granted by his Department; and for what period these wells are to be drilled.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 May 1993]: The total number of commitment wells outstanding as at 16 March 1993, to be drilled by licensees on the United Kingdom continental shelf, is 306, as follows:

	Area
Licensing round	Northern	Central	Southern	Drill by
10th	0	4	0	1993
11th	41	60	47	1995
12th and subsequent	13	75	66	1997-2000

As licence commitments are commercial-in-confidence, I am unable to supply the numbers by individual licensee.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, how many obligations remain outstanding for drilling (a) firm and (b) contingent wells under the 11th and 12th United Kingdom offshore licensing rounds.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 29 April 1993, c. 493]: I have now been informed that there are 296 outstanding obligation wells from the 11th and 12th rounds of offshore licensing. Of these, 185 are firm obligations and 111 are conditional.

Welsh Consumer Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the annual salary of the chairman of the Welsh Consumer Council.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 13 May 1993]: The appointment of chairman of the Welsh Consumer Council attracts a salary of £4,600 per annum, plus as a member of the National Consumer Council, an additional £4,600 per annum, both of which are subject to tax and national insurance.

"The Observer"

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will make a statement on the proposed sale of The Observer.

Mr. Heseltine [pursuant to his reply, 30 April 1993, c. 560-61]: I have today received an application for my consent to the proposed transfer of The Observer newspaper to Guardian Newspapers Ltd, a subsidiary of The Guardian and Manchester Evening News plc. The application invites me to give my consent without a Monopolies and Mergers Commission reference under section 58(3)(a) of the Fair Trading Act 1973. This section gives me discretion to consent to a newspaper transfer without an MMC inquiry where I am satisfied that the newspaper concerned is not economic as a going concern and as a separate newspaper, and that, if the paper is to continue, the case is one of urgency.

I should like to reach a decision as quickly as possible on whether the application falls within section 58(3)(a) of the Act, and if so whether I should give my consent without requiring an MMC report. I am, therefore, inviting comments from interested parties by 21 May. Any person wishing to comment should write by 5 pm on 21 May to:

SCOTLAND

Gruinard Island

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Gruinard island off Wester Ross was de-crofted during the time it was under Government control; if it was returned to crofting status when it was returned to its previous owner; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My Department has no information on the precise status of Gruinard island when the land was originally acquired by the then Ministry of Supply. The Crofters Commission has no record of the island ever being under crofting tenure. Under the Crofting Acts, any person with an interest may refer to the Scottish Land Court questions as to whether a holding is a croft.

Water Quality

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance or advice he is making available to the agricultural industry for schemes to minimise water pollution.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 May 1993]: The code of good practice "Prevention of Environmental Pollution from Agricultural Activity" which the Government published in March 1992 gives comprehensive advice to farmers. Advice may also be obtained from the Scottish Agricultural College.

Grants of up to 50 per cent. are available under the farm and conservation grant scheme towards the cost of waste management facilities.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research he has commissioned or is conducting into the effects of agriculture on water quality in Scotland; and what sums have been allocated to such research.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 May 1993]: The following projects currently form part of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department's commissioned programme of agricultural and related research and development:

- Measurement, modelling and prevention of transfer of pollutants from land to aquatic systems.
- Development of methods and a computer programme for treatment of livestock wastes and regulation of waste management systems.
- Protozoan, bacterial and viral pathogens, farm animal wastes and water quality protection.
- Biological mechanisms in mass algal cultures controlling the emission of nitrogen, phosphorus and carbon from animal wastes.
- Use of photobioreactor to investigate the influence of irradiance, light/dark cycles and carbon dioxide concentration on the growth of microalgae and their application to waste treatment and biotechnology.
- The effect of livestock farming (beef and dairy cattle) activities on catchment water quality.
- Use of geographical information systems techniques with process-based environmental assessment procedures for water quality modelling.
- Quantifying sources and sinks of acidity under selected hill land use, and their effects on water quality and quantity.
- Quantifying the principal hydrological and hydrochemical consequences of forestry in relation to soil type, atmospheric inputs and management practices.
- Water resource modelling: the effect of land use change and atmospheric deposition.
- Economic analysis of the effect of agricultural pollution on water quality and the potential for its control.

Operational research and modelling studies of environmental problems associated with silage effluent, slurry and other pollutants.

The current cost of these projects in 1993-94 is estimated to be about £0·9 million.

In addition, the Scottish Office Environment Department is funding research which is likely to improve understanding of the effects of agriculture on water quality. The work includes a study of nutrient transport in estuaries. £54,000 will be allocated to these projects in 1993-94.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effects of agriculture on water quality in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 13 May 1993]: Figures compiled by the Scottish farm waste liaison group show that in 1992 there were 400 water pollution incidents arising from agricultural operations compared with 521 in 1991. This significant drop is welcome. The Government hope that greater awareness of and compliance with the Control of Pollution (Silage, Slurry and Agricultural Fuel Oil) (Scotland) Regulations 1991 will result in further improvement.

ENVIRONMENT

A40 Bypass

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to conduct an environmental impact assessment of the proposed A40 bypass route to the north of Oxford.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply

In accordance with the requirement of EC directive 85/337, as applied by section 105A of the Highways Act 1980, an environmental statement in respect of the proposed A40 north of Oxford bypass was published on 25 March 1993. This coincided with publication of draft statutory orders for the scheme.

DEFENCE

Muidden Chemie (Netherlands)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements his Department has made with Muidden Chemie (Netherlands) since 1982.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no records of placing any contracts with this company in the last three years. Records for previous years could be checked only at disproportionate cost.

Equipment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements his Department has with Luchaire of France for provision of military equipment.

Mr. Aitken: The value of contracts placed with Luchaire Defence SA over the last three years is as follows:

1992-93—nil

1991-92—two contracts, total value £16,832.

1990-91—five contracts, total value £2,738,356

The contracts were for a variety of grenades and associated items.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what recommendation was made by Rolls-Royce and Associates in respect of reassessment of the need to establish a safety case before lifting nuclear submarines;

(2) what the criteria now are for establishing a safety case for the Faslane Trident shiplift.

Mr. Aitken: Before a nuclear-powered submarine is lifted at the Clyde submarine base it will be necessary to demonstrate that no reasonably foreseeable event, whether internal—for example, mechanical or electrical breakdown—or external—for example, extreme winds, waves, floods, tides or an earthquake—would result in catastrophic failure of the shiplift or an unacceptable risk to the general public. This is in line with practice in the civil nuclear industry. To provide confidence in the progress of the safety case, we commissioned independent advice from Rolls-Royce and Associates. The company made a number of detailed recommendations, all of which are either under consideration or already being implemented. The shiplift will not be used to lift a nuclear-powered submarine until its safety has been established to the satisfaction of the nuclear safety authorities.

Rolls-Royce and Associates

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultancies have been awarded by his Department to Rolls-Royce and Associates.

Mr. Aitken: Of some 280 current contracts between my Department and Rolls-Royce and Associates, only one is specifically for consultancy services. This was placed in 1992, and requires the preparation of reports on nuclear safety at the Clyde submarine base, Faslane. The hon. Member will appreciate that a full investigation of all past and present contracts to determine whether any consultancy services were required could be carried out only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Faslane Shiplift

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what equipment has been supplied by Northern Engineering Industries for the shiplift project and the syncrolift, Faslane.

Mr. Aitken: Northern Engineering Industries supplied the syncrolift, control systems and five cranes.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been paid to firms contracted to establish the safety case for the Faslane Trident shiplift.

Mr. Aitken: Expenditure to date is estimated at £20 million.

Vanguard Class Submarines

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average surface displacement weight of the Vanguard class missile submarine.

Mr. Aitken: The surface displacement of the Vanguard class Trident missile submarine is some 14,000 tonnes.

Defence Work (Relocation)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what future plans he has to encourage the allocation of defence work and related employment to the north of England and Scotland.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence does consider the employment implications when placing contracts, consulting the DTI and other Departments as appropriate. My Department's prime concern, as a customer, must be to obtain the best value for money for the taxpayer. It is for companies to decide where to locate their facilities and where to carry out work arising from contracts, though in so deciding they no doubt take into account the various Government measures to assist industry in particular areas. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry informed the House on 12 May, Official Report, column 801, of the measures being considered to help Tyneside.

Iraq (Defence Equipment)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what letter he sent to defence industry firms concerning Government policy on exports of defence equipment to Iraq in (a) 1984 and (b) 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for Lord Justice Scott's inquiry to consider.

Documents (Destruction)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 759, what criteria are used when considering whether or not to destroy documents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's records are reviewed in accordance with the terms of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967. No file of administrative or possible historical value is destroyed before five years after closure. Files are reviewed for permanent preservation after 25 years.

Scott Inquiry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information resulting from recent inspections of Iraq by the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations has been provided to the Scott inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: It would be inappropriate for me to comment in detail on the nature of information provided to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry, which is a matter between the inquiry and the Government Departments concerned.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 759, if he will publish a list of all the documents relating to the Scott inquiry that have been destroyed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 April, Official Report, column 573.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police, South Wales

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now agree to the chief constable of South Wales's bid for an increase in the police establishment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. My right hon. and learned Friend has decided that, in view of the need to maintain firm controls over public expenditure, the costs of increases in police establishments in 1993-94 cannot be justified.

Overseas Domestic Workers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish centrally funded facilities to assist overseas domestic workers seeking protection from abusive employers.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has given to the report of an investigation into the conditions of overseas domestic workers, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have replied to the organisation that sent a copy of the report to my right hon. and learned Friend. I have placed a copy of our reply in the Library.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were held on remand in custody in prisons in England and Wales as at 1 May.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 12 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the population of remand prisoners in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. The latest available information is for 31 March 1993 and shows that 9,687 male and 309 female untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners were held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales. No prisoners were held in police cells at this time.

Metropolitan Police (Racialism)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have been dismissed from the Metropolitan police force following proven charges of racialism in the course of their duties as police officers in each of the last three years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for the Commissioner. However, I am informed that no Metropolitan police officer has been found guilty of the disciplinary offence of racially discriminatory behaviour in the past three years.

Life Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were serving a life prison sentence in prisons in the United Kingdom as at 1 May.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 12 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to write to you directly in reply to your Parliamentary Question about the population of life sentence prisoners in Prison Service establishments. The latest available information is for 31 March 1993 and shows that there were 3,108 prisoners in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales serving life sentences, of whom 3,000 were men and 108 were women.

Arrests

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were (a) arrested, (b) formally cautioned and (c) charged with an offence for each of the last 10 years in each police force area.

Mr. Jack: Information concerning arrests, for all offences, 1981 to 1991 is given in the table. Cautioning data by police force area is published annually in "Criminal statistics England and Wales Supplementary tables Volume 3", table S3.7A in issues 1981 to 1990 and table S3.6A in issue 1991 refer. Copies are available in the Library. 1992 information will not be available until the autumn. Data on the number of people charged are not collected centrally.

[1] From 1985 MPD decided only to record arrest figures in terms of notifiable offences.

Police Evidence

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces are currently able to comply with the recommendations in the report of the working group on pre-trial issues (a) that witnesses' statements, interview records, case summaries and records of previous convictions be typed, (b) that there be a time limit of three weeks for the police to provide a full file of evidence to the Crown prosecution service and (c) that there be a time limit of two weeks for the police to provide an abbreviated file of evidence to the Crown prosecution service; and what is his assessment of the reasons for the extent of non-compliance.

Mr. Jack: Around a quarter of all police forces have so far implemented the full typing recommendations. The balance of forces are working to achieve this by 31 December 1993 a date set in 1992 as one of the recommendations of the steering group on pre-trial issues. All forces have introduced the time limit guidance for the provision of full and abbreviated files to the Crown prosecution service. While there will always be complex or difficult cases where it is not possible to meet the targets, police forces are working to achieve compliance with the standard.

Prison Population

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of prisoners in each prison in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Dawn Primarolo, dated 12 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question, for written answer on 10 May, on the average population in each Prison Service establishment.

Dr. Kypros Loucas

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 320, if a decision has yet been reached on the employment of Dr. Kypros Loucas at Wormwood Scrubs prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 12 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the employment of Dr. Kypros Loucas.

The employment of Dr. Loucas at HMP Wormwood Scrubs was terminated with effect from 22 March 1993.

Minimum Sentences

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses (a) when deciding whether to make a recommendation of minimum sentence and (b) when making that recommendation.

Mr. Jack: It is assumed that by "recommendation of minimum sentence", the hon. Member refers to the part played by the Secretary of State in the administration of the mandatory sentence of life imprisonment. This is the only occasion on which the Secretary of State would be involved in considering the minimum period that should be served in custody; in such cases, it is his responsibility to determine, after taking into account the views of the trial judge and the Lord Chief Justice, the minimum period necessary to satisfy the requirements of retribution and deterrence. This period is known as the "tariff".

Prison Medical Officers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of whole-time equivalent prison medical officers in each prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Dawn Primarolo, dated 12 May 1993:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question regarding the number of whole time equivalent prison medical officers in each prison.

There are 243 prison medical officers employed in the Prison Service. This figure includes medical officers of all grades and part-time medical officers where appropriate. In some instances two part-time posts will form a full-time equivalent.

A list of all establishments showing the breakdown of prison medical officers in each prison by grade and indicating both full and part-time posts has been laid in the library of the House.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of complaints against the police investigated in each police authority in England and Wales for each year since 1987.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Figures of those complaints that receive a full investigation are not readily available. The table gives figures for all complaint cases received by forces during 1987-92. A case may consist of more than one matter giving cause for complaint.

NHS Loto

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the police completed their investigation into the National Hospital Trust lottery scheme, NHS Loto, mentioned in paragraph 85 of the report of the Gaming Board for Great Britain 1989-90; what was the outcome of the investigation; and what action has since been taken.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the case is currently being considered by the Crown prosecution service in the light of recent reports by the police.

Immigration Service (Privatisation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to privatise or contract out duties presently carried out by immigration officials; what research has been carried out to assess the possibility of future privatisation in this area; what representations he has received on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office market testing programme for 1992-93 includes the provision of catering and security guard services and the recruitment of Immigration Service personnel by the immigration and nationality department. The proposals for 1993-94 are to market test in the immigration and nationality department, the typing, postroom and registries, reprographic and messengerial support services. Discussions have been held including with trade union representatives.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to market test the work of immigration officers at ports of entry or the work of other officials who take decisions on his behalf under immigration law.

Refugees

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unaccompanied children under 18 years applied for refugee status on arrival in the United Kingdom in 1992 and in each month in 1993; and what was the country of origin of these children.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is given in the table.

Police (Contracting Unit)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for contracting out functions and duties currently carried out by the Metropolitan police and other police forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Compulsory competitive tendering is to be extended to 40 per cent. of the annual cost of police vehicle maintenance and repair in the first instance, and to 90 per cent. of the annual cost of the cleaning of police buildings. CCT will also be extended in due course to a proportion of the cost of police authority and construction services.

The Metropolitan police are not covered by local authority statutory requirements, but a policy of market testing has been introduced. The aim is to test up to 30 per cent. of the work of the personnel, finance, technology, and property services departments over the next two and a half years. Action plans are also being drawn up to market test other administrative and support functions. The extend to which the above work will be contracted out or retained in-house will depend upon the results of individual testing exercises.

I refer also to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 16 February, at columnn 139, that the court escort service in the Metropolitan police district and in three other areas should be contracted out.

Safer Cities

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the sums of money the Government are making available directly to each of the original 16 safer city projects during the transitional period, together with the date on which transitional finance will commence in each case and the length of time for which it will continue to be available in each case.

Mr. Jack: The original 16 safer cities projects will cease to receive Home Office funding after March 1994.

Each of these projects has £100,000 available in grant funding in 1993-94 to support local crime prevention schemes. In addition, in the current financial year they have access to further funds from a central pool of £500,000 which has been set aside to assist the development locally of continuing structures from the maintenance of multi-agency crime prevention work.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are being used to decide how the transitional money being made available to the original 16 safer cities projects should be allocated to the respective projects.

Mr. Jack: The original 16 safer cities projects due to close in March 1994 have access to a central pool of £500,000 to assist the development locally of continuing structures for the maintenance of multi-agency crime prevention work. That is the only criterion for the use of this money. The projects were invited to submit their plans and expenditure proposals to the Home Office on the assumption that, subject to the viability of the plans, they will each receive about £31,000 from the pool.

Rail Lines (Vandalism)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a table listing the dates, details and sentences of court hearings for acts of vandalism on rail lines during each of the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, for the period concerned the number of prosecutions for vandalism on rail lines is as follows:

	England and Wales	Scotland	Total
1991	582	48	630
1992	531	59	590
[1]1993	106	11	117

[1] 1 January 1993 to 11 May 1993.

These figures include summary and indictable prosecutions and sentences ranged from four years imprisonment to conditional discharges, depending on the severity of each individual incident.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to bring forward any measures necessary to empower a traffic warden to require the production at a police station by a motorist of a current certificate of motor vehicle insurance in any case in which he or she is currently empowered to require production of a driving licence;

(2) what powers he has to extend to traffic wardens the power to require a motorist to produce at a police station a certificate of vehicle insurance in any case in which he or she is currently empowered to require production of a driving licence.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answers 10 and 11 May 1993]: Sections 95(5) and 96 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 empower the Secretary of State to make a statutory instrument prescribing the appropriate functions of traffic wardens. Those provisions could be used to empower traffic wardens to require the production of a current certificate of motor insurance in the circumstances described. There are no plans at present to do so.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many crimes were recorded for the Metropolitan police area and for each borough within the metropolitan area in 1989, 1991 and 1992;

(2) how many crimes were recorded for the Metropolitan police area and for each borough within the metropolitan area in 1989, 1991 and 1992 as (a) burglary of a house, (b), non-domestic burglary, (c) theft from a motor vehicle and (d) theft of a motor vehicle, including taking without consent;

(3) how many crimes in each category of crime were recorded for the Metropolitan police area and for each borough within the metropolitan area in 1989, 1991 and 1992;

Mr. Jack [holding answer 29 April 1993]: Tables giving recorded crime figures broken down by offence group and by borough within the Metropolitan police district are in the Library. Figures for burglary in a dwelling, other burglary and theft of and from motor vehicles by borough have been supplied by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and are given in the tables.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many crimes were recorded in 1992 for (a) each county in England and Wales and (b) each district within each county; and what was the percentage change in each case compared with the equivalent figures for (i) 1991 and (ii) 1989;

(2) how many crimes were recorded for each category of crime in 1992 for (a) each county in England and Wales and (b) each district within each county; and what was the percentage change in each case compared with the equivalent figure in (i) 1991 and (ii) 1989;

(3) how many crimes were recorded for each police authority area in England and Wales in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992 as being (i) burglary of homes, (ii) non-domestic burglary, (iii) theft from motor vehicles and cars and (iv) theft of motor vehicles, including taking without consent.

(4) what was the total number of crimes recorded for each category of crime for each police force area in England and Wales in 1992.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 29 April 1993]: The information collected centrally relates to police force areas and the available statistics are provided in the tables. Figures for crimes recorded by category in 1989 and 1991 are published by police force area in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" in table 2.5

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Northern Cyprus

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Government Ministers have visited northern cyprus since 1979.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Five.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of the United Kingdom's relations with the Turkish republic of northern Cyprus, and on the implications of the visit of the Lord Chancellor to Northern Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We do not recognise the so-called Turkish republic of northern Cyprus, and neither does any other country except Turkey. We do acknowledge the legitimate interests of the Turkish Cypriot community, and have contact with their leaders in order to promote United Nations efforts for an intercommunal settlement in Cyprus and where British consular or other interests are concerned. The Lord Chancellor's informal meeting with Mr. Denktash is in line with this policy; and has no implications for our policy of non-recognition.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations his Department carried out with non-governmental organisations concerned with proliferation matters prior to preparing the British policy position and proposals for the first preparatory committee meeting on 10 to 14 May for the fifth review conference on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and what criteria were used in choosing the non-governmental organisations with which he consulted.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our Department has regular contacts with non-governmental organisations interested in the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons and intends to continue these. We received no requests from such organisations for consultations on our policy in regard to this meeting.

Arms Transfers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) of 5 May, Official Report, column 144, what was the cost of compiling the United Kingdom submission to the United Nations register of conventional arms transfers; to whom it has been circulated; and what was the purpose of the exports to countries where this is not covered by a note.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested about the cost of the register is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The United Kingdom's return was submitted to the United Nations Secretary-General on 29 April. It was circulated to conference on security and co-operation in Europe participating states on 5 May. The purpose of exports not covered by a footnote in the United Kingdom's return was the fulfilment of contracts placed by the Governments of the countries concerned.

Hungary

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if she will make a statement on the purpose and outcome of his recent visit to Hungary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the oral answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 12 May, Official Report, column 787.

Belize

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of Belize about the proposals to withdraw British troops and personnel from Belize.

Mr. Garel Jones: We forewarned the Belizean Government about our plans for the evolution of the British military presence and have taken account of their concerns.

Diplomatic Estate

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373, if he will list those publications, in addition to the Official Journal, of the European Community, in which invitations are routinely published for construction companies to tender for work on the overseas diplomatic estate.

Mr. Goodlad: The answer is 2,595. Invitations to tender are not routinely published. It is our policy to invite tenders from construction companies shortlisted after pre-selection procedures.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373, how often, and in what format, the further information about a wider range of projects to which he refers is circulated to the Export Group for the Construction Industries; if that information includes all opportunities for work on the overseas diplomatic estate, or only selected opportunities for such work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The answer is 2,596. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office sends a list about once a year to the Export Group for the Construction Industries of key details about planned projects likely to be of interest to United Kingdom construction companies and of an estimated value above a stated threshold. For 1983-86 the threshold was £250,000; for 1987-89, £500,000; and since 1990, £1 million. The latest list will be sent within the next few weeks.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373, who are the current members of the Export Group for the Construction Industries.

Mr. Goodlad: We understand that the current membership of the Export Group for the Construction Industries is as follows:

ACER Group
Amec International Construction
Balfour Beatty
Biwater International
Bovis
Brown & Root
CEGELEC Projects
Costain Civil Engineering
Drake & Scull International
John Laing International
Kier International
Lilley Construction
Alfred McAlpine International
Maples
Miller Construction
Mivan Overseas
Mowlem International
Edmund Nuttall
Rotary Group
Sterling International Civil Engineering
Tarmac construction
Taylor Woodrow International
Trafalgar House Construction
Wade Adams Construction
George Wimpey International

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373 if he will make a statement on the grounds upon which the French company Glauser International was awarded the £4·8 million contract for the work on the new immigration and consular building in Islamabad.

Mr. Goodlad: Glauser International was awarded the contract, in preference to the other three firms—one of them British—who submitted tenders, because its tender was the lowest, it had an established presence in Pakistan and it offered higher levels of supervision, including an experienced British project manager, and an earlier completion date.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373, if he will list those criteria by which practicable participation is assessed when considering tenders by British companies for work on the overseas diplomatic estate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The criteria for practicable participation in given local circumstances are assessed when drawing up the short list of companies to be invited to tender. The criteria include local regulations about the participation of non-local companies and of joint ventures, the managerial and technical competence and the financial status of companies under consideration, the extent of their local presence, experience and knowledge of local working conditions, and their track record in comparable circumstances.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 373, if he will make a statement providing details of the way in which best value for money is assessed when considering tenders by British companies for work on the overseas diplomatic estate.

Mr. Goodlad: British companies that meet the pre-qualification criteria are invited to tender in competition with local or other companies, similarly pre-qualified: this ensures competition and the best value of money for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. After their receipt, tenders are assessed on price, compliance with the technical documentation—or acceptable alternatives—and project execution capability.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish details of those contracts valued at £500,000 or more which have been awarded for work on the overseas diplomatic estate in each of the last five years for which figures are available; if he will indicate, in each case, the location of the work, the value of the contract awarded, the name and the nationality of the company which was given the contract; if any British company tendered for the work; in which publications advertisements for the tender were placed; and why, if a British company tendered for the work, its bid was not successful.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested is being deposited in the Library of the House.

Political Parties (State Funding)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have taken place since his answer of 17 July 1990, Official Report, column 496, in arrangements for state funding for politcal parties in each of the Group of Seven nations.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The information available to us is as follows:

(a) Canada
No change from the answer of 17 July 1990, Official Report, column 496;

(b) France
A Bill passed in autumn 1992 provided for:
(i) public funding of political parties which put up at least 50 candidates, in proportion to their share of the vote in the legislative elections and where applicable, to the number of their senators and deputies; and
(ii) reimbursement of campaign expenses up to a maximum of FF50,000, provided that the candidate obtains at least 5 per cent. of the vote in the first round.
These arrangements will not come into effect until after 1994.

(c) Germany
The existing legislation—1990 answer—is under review.

(d) Italy
Italians voted in the referendums on 18 and 19 April to abolish state funding of political parties.

(e) Japan
No change in formal state funding.

(f) United States
President Clinton introduced on 7 May a proposal for campaign finance reform. Under it, candidates accepting voluntary limits on spending would receive vouchers for broadcast air time, postage and printing from federal funds. These would be financed by closing a loophole allowing tax deductions for lobbying expenses and increasing the voluntary check-off on tax returns to $5. The proposal is controversial.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 224

SESSION 1992–93

4th May, 1993—14th May, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
